KIND WORDS NEVER DIE.

Glenfield, Pa.

Chas. T. Siebert:—I take pleasure in expressing satisfaction in using your Zinc Glazing Points. They have outlasted all others used, therefore are better and cheaper. Their merit should result in extended sales. Sincerely yours, THEO. F. BECKERT, Florist.

Berwick, Pa.

Chas. T. Siebert:—Enclosed please find M. O. for more Zinc Points, the same as others sent. They are decidedly the best we ever used.

Respectfully, JOHN A. SMITHERS & SONS, Florists.

Chas. T. Siebert:—Please book my order for 100 lbs. of Zinc Never Rust Glazing Points. I have used five different kinds in the past 12 years, and none of them gave me satisfaction like yours. They will stay in, are easy to drive, no rights or lefts, will hold the glass in place, and do not rust away like all others I have used. Your Zinc Points are easy to take out when making repairs. I have used about 100 lbs. of your Zinc Points in the last two years, and I am perfectly satisfied with them.

Yours truly, F. BURKI.

Trade Notes.

The State Florists' Association met on March 4th to wind up carnation convention affairs. One very surprising thing was developed and that was the fact that after every bill was paid there were several hundred dollars left. This was quite a pleasant surprise to all of us, as many of us had half way expected to dig down into our pockets for a few more loose dollars to make up a possible deficit. It was unanimously agreed that the surplus money shall be placed on interest until there shall be another such occasion calling for a large sum of money.

Mr. A. Rott, of Bloomington, Ind., was elected to membership.

After the business was done away with yours truly read a paper on the carnation show, which was well received and stirred up quite a discussion among those present.

Mr. A. Wiegand was taken very ill on March 4 and suffered much pain for a few hours, but prompt medical attention soon brought him around and he is out again as hale and hearty as ever.

Trade has been exceptionally good during the past few weeks and it seems as though Lent were cutting into the florist business less each year. All the growers are in very good shape for Easter, providing the weather is not too severe. We noticed at Wiegand's a fine lot of hydrangeas and Crimson Ramblers just in fine shape for Easter. A. B.

Albert Lea, Minn.—P. Clansen & Son have about 12,000 sq. ft. of glass here and grow cut flowers and a general line of plants for retail trade. They make a specialty of carnations, growing about 7,000 plants this season, wholesaling the larger part of the cut to a St. Paul firm. They contemplate doing a little rebuilding this summer, adding a little over 1,000 ft. of glass to their plant. They find business improving, especially shipping trade.

Oskaloosa, Ia.—The Kemble Floral Co. contemplate making extensive improvements in their plant this season. There will be a general reconstruction of the establishment.

Catskill, N. Y.—Henry Hansen will this coming summer add another house, 60x20, for carnations. He anticipates a good Easter trade.

CYCLAMEN.

"C. L. D." asks: "Are this year's cyclamen bulbs from seed worth saving over? If so, with what treatment?"

Mr. D. means plants that are a year or a little older from the seed. Yes, they are occasionally carried over, and, if successfully, make very large plants. There may be more than one way of handling them. The following I have seen done with success: As soon as the plants are out of flower keep them rather dry and in a cool house. Don't let the bulbs shrivel, but if the foliage goes, no matter, because the rest is good for them. In May or early June a good deal of the soil can be shaken off, and start them growing again either in a house or, what is still better, a very mild hotbed. Of course they will want shifting during summer. They make very large plants, but when you consider what a splendid plant can be grown from seed in one year, it is seldom that cyclamen are carried over, and I would not recommend anyone to bother with them. W. S.

ADVERTISING BY RETAILERS.

I note the question asked by one of your subscribers regarding advertising by retailers. I have long been interested in this subject. I have tried circulars, programs for various occasions, church books and papers. Have always had reading matter in two of our local newspapers.

But I think I got the best value from a scheme I tried this season. I got several hundred thermometers with my name and business address on, and distributed them freely in our public places. It seems to me that this is the best advertising of all, as a thermometer is something that anybody will hang up, and then the people cannot help seeing your adv.

I would be much interested in hearing from other retailers on this subject of advertising. G. Holst, Jr.

Four New Carnations for 1902.

Sales limited to 25,000 of each variety. Orders filled in rotation as received and booked.

ALBA

A white never showing any trace of color, largest size and perfect form.

STELLA

White penciled pink, comes into flower early and shows a mass of buds and bloom throughout the entire season. This is undoubtedly the most satisfactory of all the variegated carnations where large flowers in quantity are wanted at all times.

DOROTHY WHITNEY

The best commercial yellow we have ever grown. It gives quantity, of best form and strong stems all through the season.

APOLLO

The brightest scarlet in the commercial class. It is much brighter than Crane, of equal size bloom and better stems. Early and very free.

Price: $12.00 per 100; $27.50 per 250; $55.00 per 500; $100.00 per 1000. 250 each of the above four varieties for $100.00

THE COTTAGE GARDENS' NOVELTIES. J. H. MANLEY—A large, early and free scarlet. VIOLA ALLEN—White edged and splashed rose pink. HARRY FENN—New Harvard crimson. VIOLANIA—sport of Bradt with less markings. Price: $12.00 per 100; $27.50 per 250; $55.00 per 500; $100.00 per 1000.

OTHER 1902 NOVELTIES. GAIETY (Hill)—White striped scarlet, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000. CRESSBROOK (Warburton)—Pink, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000. MRS. E. A. NELSON (Nelson)—Pink, $10.00 per 100; $80.00 per 1000.

SEED TRADE NOTES.

Boston and New York seedsmen generally report both mail and counter trade as being quite satisfactory, notwithstanding the season is somewhat backward, and they look for this year to be a record-breaker in the seed business.

First-class Pearl tuberoses are practically cleaned up in the eastern markets, and second size bulbs, which are of fair quality, are now bringing good prices. Growers of this bulb are demanding a stiff advance over last year's prices on contract orders for next year.

Large dealers in Japanese fern balls report that while the demand for the larger sizes was rather slow during the early part of the year, there is now an active call and some large stocks have been cleaned up lately, consequently an advance in price is looked for soon.

A reliable Bermuda grower reports that there is only 60 per cent of last year's acreage planted to Harrisii this year, and a shortage in the 7 to 9-inch and larger sizes is looked for again.

S.

THE KANSAS CITY SHOW.

Superintendent John Thorpe recently visited Director General Taggart for conference regarding the exhibition of 1902, and Mr. Thorpe also appeared before the Board of Directors of Convention Hall.

In spite of the immense space in the hall, more room was considered necessary, and it has been decided to "annex the roof." It seems there is a roof garden on the building, and this will be used for part of the exhibition.

The amount of the premium list has now been definitely settled, by the addition of $500, making the total $7,500. Of this $1,000 will be offered in prizes for carnations. The carnation is coming in for its share of attention now-a-days.

HEATING.

I contemplate building a carnation house 24x100 ft., equal span, 14 ft. to ridge. Please state what sized boiler would heat it to about 60 degrees at night. Also whether steam or hot water would be preferable. In either case kindly state size and number of flows and returns necessary.

Which is more expensive to run—hot water or steam? Do you prefer house to run east and west or north and south?

F. E. C.

For the heating of one house 100x24, as described, hot water would be preferable. The size of the boiler required would depend somewhat upon the pattern or make of boiler used. It should have, however, not less than from 3½ to 4 sq. ft. of grate surface and about 100 sq. ft. of heating surface. This house would require 17 lines of 2-inch pipe, arranged as heating coils beneath the benches to maintain a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees on coldest nights. The cost of maintenance for the heating plant for the house of these proportions would be practically the same, either for steam or water. As to the location of the house, I should prefer to run it north and south, in order to get the greatest duration of effective sunlight on the plants, possible.

Henry W. Gibbons.

New York.

[Most of the large carnation growers now build their new houses running east and west, even when equal span. Ed.]

BOILER FOR ROSE HOUSE.

Am thinking of building a three-quarter span rose house, long span to south, well sheltered from north winds, 14 feet wide. I have a boiler 2 ft. 2 in. in diameter, 4 ft. high, 14 3-inch tubes 2 ft. long, fire box 2 ft. high. Will use anthracite coal and heat with 3-inch hot water pipes, two under north bench, two under middle bench and three under south bench. I want to heat to 60 degrees in zero weather, with reduced draft. What length could I make the house? Or, rather, how many square feet of glass could I heat? Would expect to attend to the fire but once during the night. L.

From the description of the little boiler given by L., I should consider about 350 sq. ft., of radiating surface, or 900 sq. ft. of glass surface, a reasonable estimate of its capacity.

ANTS IN CARNATION HOUSE.

Can you tell me how to keep my carnation benches free from black ants? They attack the flowers. My carnation plants are free of any and all insects that might attract the ants. Benches were thoroughly cleaned and whitewashed before planting. Subscriber.

A very good way of destroying ants in the greenhouse is to mix sugar and Paris green and scatter here and there on the edge-board of the bench. The sugar will draw the ants and the Paris green will do the rest. This will also help to destroy sowbugs if there are any around. A. F. J. Baur.

STEAM BOILERS.

I have a steam boiler 10 feet long and three feet diameter, containing 30 3-inch tubes and 6 2½-inch tubes. I intend to build this in an arch, with fire under, returning through tubes, and use it for hot water heating. Would like to know the size of pipe openings necessary, two in top for flows and two in bottom for returns, and the capacity of boiler in square feet of glass, or amount of 2-inch pipe it will carry.

Virginia. W. G.

In reply to W. G., for the effective circulation of hot water from the boiler which he describes, he should have two flow and two return connections of not less than 4½-inch diameter each, and if the boiler is to be placed far from the circulating coils, it would be better to make the connections 5-inch each. The capacity of this boiler in sq. ft. of glass is approximately 14,000 feet, in his latitude, assuming an inside temperature of about 60 degrees.

CONCRETE WALLS.

From what I have occasionally read and heard there seems to have been various buildings erected of late years of concrete material, but I have not heard of any greenhouses being constructed with it for walls. It seems as though this material ought to be very useful for the purpose.

Are any readers of the Review acquainted with the use of concrete for building? I intend to try it in a house this spring and would like to know just how to do it, the proper ingredients to use and in what proportions, and other particulars. A. S.

Concrete makes an excellent wall for greenhouses. The materials used in its composition are one part, by measure, of good Portland cement to six parts of broken stone, gravel, cinders or broken slag, and which ever of these materials is selected as being most available or cheapest to procure in your vicinity, great care must be taken to thoroughly screen out any dust, sand or loam, which they may contain, as the presence of such fine matter will require the use of a much greater portion of cement or destroy the strength of the whole.

The procedure is to make a form of rough boards for the wall intended to be built, or a portion of it. The surface of these boards, which are intended to come in contact with the concrete, may, if desired, be washed over with a thin solution of common yellow soap and water, which will prevent the cement in the concrete from sticking to the boards when setting. Then mix the dry cement and other selected ingredient in the portions above named, then wet the mixture with water until the cement commences to run, and continue stirring until all the coarser parts of the composition are thoroughly covered with a thin coat of cement. Then throw it into the wall forms and ram thoroughly. This operation is of the greatest importance, as on the ramming depends largely the strength of the walls. When the material has become set, remove the boards and you will have a strong and indestructible wall at a low cost.

Such walls are somewhat porous, and, if desired, may be thoroughly sealed up by slushing the surface with the mixture of one part of cement to two of sand, mixed with water to the consistency of white-wash, to be put on with an ordinary white-wash brush.

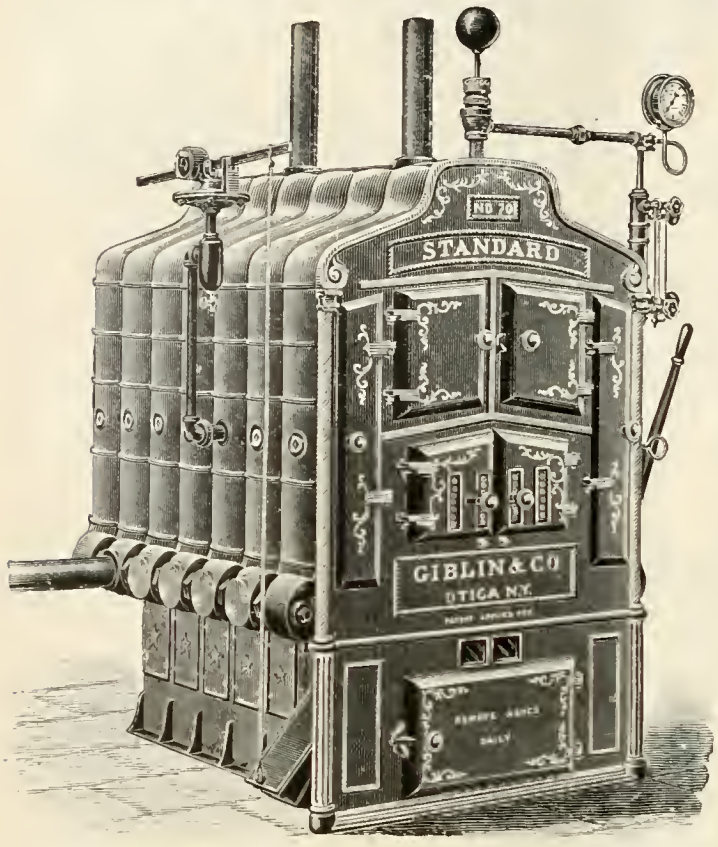
PEACE OF MIND



is not generally included in the cost of the heating apparatus, yet every florist knows how valuable it is to him to have an apparatus that he can arrange

IN THE EVENING

ONE OF THE FEATURES of our boilers, as is fully

EXPLAINED BY THE

following letter:

W. D. Snell, Newville, Herkimer Co., N. Y., Jan. 2, 1901, says: "I wish to express my thorough satisfaction with the No. 70 Standard Sectional steam boiler which I placed in my greenhouses early in December last year. I have three houses, 20x65, located side by side, with glass in roofs and gables. The houses are built of glass and wood and contain in all about 5,000 square feet of glass surface. I have in use about 2,000 feet one-inch pipe, or about 700 square feet of radiation. I carry a temperature of about 50 degrees at night, but have had no difficulty in getting any higher temperature desired. I find that the boiler will run ten hours without attention. I attend to it about nine o'clock at night and it will run with no further attention until seven o'clock in the morning. The draft I have is not a good one, yet notwithstanding this objection, I have no difficulty in getting the fire up and getting as much steam as I desire.

"I can thoroughly recommend the boiler and will be glad to have you refer to me anyone that wants further information."

EMERGENCY BOILERS.

I am going to put up a new carnation house as soon as the season will permit. The house will be 30x66. I have one house 120 ft. by 21. I have a steam boiler that will heat this and the new house easy, but I wish to use it for an emergency boiler, as it has been in use eight seasons. Will it be better to buy a low-pressure power boiler or a boiler constructed for greenhouse heating, or better yet sell the old boiler and get two boilers, either one large enough to carry what steam is necessary for the two houses with some to spare? In either case I wish to hold one boiler in reserve.

A. H. D.

The two greenhouses described would hardly be sufficient to make an installation of an ordinary power boiler desirable. The boiler now in use, having had eight seasons' work, could be held for light spring and fall use, and as a reserve in case of emergency, and it would be well to purchase a sectional greenhouse heating boiler for the regular heating of the houses, procuring a boiler which could readily have some additional sections added, in case additional duty should, at any time, be required.

From an economic point of view, I do not think it would be advisable to get two new boilers until such time as the old one is unfit for use, unless, by a streak of luck, you could get a good price for this oil boiler, which I hardly think you could sell for what its value is to you, as it stands.

THE GARLAND

Iron Gutter and Iron Post Construction

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN DURING CONSTRUCTION.

BY using the Garland Iron Gutter and Iron Post construction in the above range of six houses, each 26 feet 8 inches wide by 250 feet long, there was made a saving of $1,200.00 over wooden gutter and wooden post construction. The Iron Gutter and Iron Post construction cost $100.00 per house more than wooden gutters and wooden posts, but there was a gain of 750 square feet of available bench surface in each house. This additional bench surface is worth at least 40 cents a square foot, and therefore, a total of $300.00 per house. Deducting from this the $100.00 extra cost of the Iron Gutters and Iron Posts, left a saving of $200.00 on each house over wooden construction. And on the six houses the gain was $1,200,00. This was the saving for the first year. In following years the full $1,800.00 will be saved annually. That the space gained is just as valuable as any other in the house is attested by many of the most noted florists in the country. Aside from the saving noted this range of houses will last indefinitely.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Easter Weddings.

Easter wedding decorations will be the most important subject for thought among many of the REVIEW'S friends by the time this issue reaches them, and we cannot too often repeat that inasmuch as it is the universal custom nowadays to ask for estimates on even the smallest work, the first great care must be given to a study of the people, the available material and very often the most important of all, the intelligence and style of your estimate. Many a good, big job is won by the apparent force of an up-to-date letter. Many critical people either demand or at least appreciate sketches with your estimate, and a few wide-awake florists provide for this. It is not a new idea, for back twenty years ago colored sketches of decorations accompanied the estimates for the principal events in New York. Many florists who have sons and daughters attending schools should provide for this most important branch of the future florists' requirements. There are many decorators to-day who only require a few lessons in free hand drawing in order to enable them to furnish customers with rough sketches outlining their proposed work.

Confidence is everything, and in order to win confidence it is necessary to continually exert oneself and overcome all obstacles. All of you know that whenever one of your customers or any one in the neighborhood has a large decoration or particular piece of work to have done, they will leave their accustomed path of dealing and go to the florist they imagine is capable of doing the work in the best manner. It often occurs that the swell florist is all appearances. There is ability and lots of it in every little florist's establishment in the country, but the trouble is it doesn't show itself prominently enough. People size up your personal tidiness and the condition of your place at all times. Size of greenhouses or store is of less consequence than good material and a pleasing way. Plants will not stand for the treatment of a careless grower. The American people will not tolerate or waste time humoring the careless florist.

What is called "smartness" is attainable by all and is a necessity on the way to success to-day. No matter where you are, how isolated you are, how small your business is, your business friends and the outside world will most often judge you by what you send them, and in talking to you about Easter decorations we cannot too strongly emphasize the importance of clean, carefully composed correspondence relative to your work. You need not exaggerate or even approach the fake in your descriptions, but you can in many ways show an intelligence and ability with typewriter or pen that will go a long way to insure confidence and win you trade. Might as well do the things now that you will be compelled to do later in order to win back trade or keep the wolf-rival out of your domain. People in the small cities these days look for or demand the same styles and fads peculiar to the large cities, in fact the United States in the matter of fashion and a certain line of ambition is but a great big New York city to-day. There is an imperative demand for the "latest" in every section in every walk of civilization.

In the matter of good work or the art of decorating there is no exception of appreciation, and you may have and very often do have, better material for fine work in your small place than the imposing city florist. It is merely a question of how best to use what you have. The artist painter never wallows in paint, the artist florist is best judged also by his work, not the material, and if perchance you do not grow or cannot buy some things which you know are certain to be wanted for one thing or another the condition only indicates that you are indifferent, and indifference in the florist business is like a cankered plant.

We have been told by some that our notes are in too high a key to suit the smaller florists, but we know them well and there's time enough for all. We thank the gentlemen connected with other papers for their kindness, but the REVIEW is good enough for anybody, and other papers haven't got enough money to purchase the points of this pencil. Excuse us for digressing, we were looking at some letters.

Now let us chat on the "latest" in decorations for Easter weddings. Let us consider the question of canopies. They seem to be an essential, in fact the principal item in most wedding decorations in this country. Well, there are many new things, or rather new uses of old designs and ideas. An important thing is to know the taste or what will please that one particular customer. Don't confine your suggestion to one design, however; let them have several to choose from. In the case of the sporty or horse-racing folks the horseshoe canopy is sometimes used. This consists of an immense horseshoe facing outwards and ends resting on two iron posts, six feet apart and eight feet high. You must make the shoe solid and of one bright color, with some distinctive flower representing nails and tips.

Then there is the sea-shell canopy, which, whilst it particularly appeals to those who spend most of their lives upon the water, also is a favorite with the romantically inclined and even the usually cold, prosaic sort of people. If the sea-shell canopy is proposed and described in an intelligent way it will receive serious consideration from any one. It is usually five or six feet in dimensions, and is supported by a single iron pipe stand in the back. It is a difficult design to make up in a way that the full force of its beauty and meaning will show. No use making it of flowers, for of all the designs this one demands the closest imitation of nature; you must show every outline and at least pretend to use material associated with rocks of the sea, therefore it is best to use nothing but moss.

We know many florists will think it awfully funny when we say that the very finest design can be made of nothing but very green sheet moss. It is so with the one under discussion. Wet the moss well to make it pliable and sew it on to the frame with green cord. Be careful to preserve every outline of the shell. You can place one cluster of apple blossoms on the top when finished. Sometimes grey Florida moss is used for the interior of the shell, with green for the outside. It can also be done by close pinned leucothoe leaves, but in all cases it must be simple. The surroundings can be as elaborate as you please, but the shell itself must be recognizable.

For the musicians the Egyptian lyre is the prettiest compliment. This should be made of one or two colored bright flowers, and the strings should be of silvered and gilt tinselled ribbon. Then we have the Empress wreath, which makes a beautiful effect when made properly and tied with long streamers of white sash ribbon with the monograms and date painted on the ends. There are the different styles of arches, love knots, etc., which you all know of, and it's only for you to let the people know when proposing these designs that you are the master of how they should be made to look best.

No matter what the thing may be, when used as a canopy it should be so arranged as to fill out the meaning of the word, that is hang overhead and though it may be true that many a wedding is but the funeral of happiness, still the florist should not imply that in his work. Designs such as we have mentioned should not be made as if they were tokens of regard for the departed. They should be bright and emblematic of joy. Needn't make them loud; there are soft hues which, like smiles, are often more potent than loud laughter. It is good to remember that in all walks of life and at all times there is a soft spot that can be reached by thoughts of the old home. It is neither hypocrisy nor sharp business acumen that may prompt you to suggest the use of material associated with marked periods of a customer's life, it is a kindred thought or wish of your own heart. You can never anger a southern man or woman by proposing to use the palms or magnolias of the sunny south, and there are parallels on all sides.

There is another class, and it is growing immensely, that will have none of your formal effects. They can only be caught and held by an elaboration on the simplicity of design copied from nature; that is, an arbor of palms, an arch of roses, a rose tree, an apple tree, or some such form, and nothing can be prettier. There will be plenty of Crimson Ramblers left after the Easter rush. Untwine some, cut off the blooms of those intended for the wedding arbor and tie on those of any other desired color, making sure that one variety only is used, and that they are so wired as to appear growing. You can beat any artist or any design ever gotten up by copying a climbing rose in the month of June. Never mind far-fetched, labored and cumbersome "get ups," unless you are compelled to as we have previously stated.

One can never depend on tastes, and it is wise to submit food for all, but it will redound to your own credit and profit if you seek to elevate as well as feed a coarse taste. It is no longer necessary to worry about carpenters and outside mechanical aid (except in the case of electricians) when contemplating the decoration of even the most difficult buildings. Education has made the florist independent of all other artisans. He, if he will, is master of his own art and the beautifier of all others. Where in other days it was thought necessary to build cumbersome structures and use great quantities of lumber and nails for what is considered an ordinary job today, we realize and laugh at our folly then and adopt simpler methods. A sash cord or copper wire has taken the place of ropes and timber hooks, and gummed pasters have replaced nails and the consequent damage. Wire netting has to a large and increasing degree dispensed with moss and the ideal in design has superceeded the incongruous models that were familiar to past generations.

Where there is a church wedding, for instance, and either a cheap or expensive job is to be done (mind you, the same principle applies, you must give satisfaction, that is all sufficient), your material must be so arranged as to excite a thought or cause a complimentary comment. Therefore, whatever you use, put it where it will show to its very best. But we must cut this short until next week. In the meantime if any readers are puzzled or anxious to know anything pertaining to retail work we will most gladly answer them.

Just a few abbreviations that may be important to those who have orders for immediate execution. Orange blossoms are very plentiful and are the traditional flower among one race of people for weddings. They are suitable for head wreath, boutonniere, hand bouquet or breast spray. No other foliage permissible, unless in the case of large hand bouquets. Brides, Ivory, Sarah Nesbitt (Apple Blossom), Mrs. Oliver Ames, White Lady, Cherokee, Lamarque, Devoniensis, or any other white, or what is called French white rose (by the way, the French don't recognize dead white), can be used, and don't forget an Irish girl would always select Liberty roses above all other were she told the truth, that it was an Irish rose, and then again the American might choose the American Beauty.

The dead lines between white and cheerful colors are fast fading away, and better it is so. Why should a wedding be all white? Who and what is responsible for the cruel satire that a bride should be dressed almost like a corpse and carry naught but reminders of snows and cemeteries? It's all pure humbug—a looking backward several centuries to the obscure and dampened ideals of some court idiot. A bunch of gardenias, apple blossoms, any spring blossom, valley, orchids, carnations, any colored rose, daisies, lilies—in fact, any flower you know to be the bride's favorite—is best to suggest, be it even pansies, and no man will refuse his bride her favorite flower, especially on her wedding day. And, above all, no matter what it is, the groom should wear the same variety of flower in his coat. Your decorations may be what you or they suggest, but let the bride carry her favorite flower to the altar.

In the meantime you need not get flurried about special detail, if you have a lot of stock left over after Easter. Needn't buy much, even if you do have particular folks to deal with; use what you have to the best advantage: it is often the case that you must pay more for your materials than the job is worth (a condition that is threatening the trade today and should be discouraged). An abundance will satisfy the majority of people.

Just a last word about Easter. Be reasonable on plants and cut flowers. Charge, if you like, on your made-up work, where ability is really worth more than stock. Don't lose one customer if you can help it. Watch carefully the temporary help; they may drive away in a moment what it has taken you years to reach. When you are packing your Easter boxes of cut flowers, needn't put in a lot of ugly, common greens; just a few at the end of the box to elevate the first flowers, and, in the case of spring flowers, carnations, etc., it is far better to have them bunched; have them done in 12s or 25s before Sunday; it is far better for a lady to take a bunch of twelve carnations in a box than hand it to her to pick that dozen out singly. Get your flowers to the people in good condition.

Violets will be the principal flower this Easter morning, and the sweeter your customers get them the better for you. Let's drop the humbug of having violets picked on Friday intended for wear on Sunday. Let us be up to date. Save the future of the flower by serving it sweet. No tinfoil needed; just velvet ribbon for the very extra, silk ties for the next, gauze or cords for the indifferent. Small green galax leaves under all to keep them up.

A best Easter to all. Ivera.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

To protect the feeding roots that are now near the surface from strong sunshine and to keep the benches from drying out too quickly they should now get a liberal mulching of rich compost. The soil (if the plants have been doing good work) will by this time be much exhausted, and as the spring crop of wood is coming on they will require some fresh material to work on. By mulching now the blooms can be kept up to size for quite a long time, even in hot weather.

The compost should consist of two-thirds well-decomposed cow manure and one-third good rose soil; to this should be added twenty pounds of dessicated bone meal to each cubic yard of compost, the whole to be thoroughly incorporated and put on the bench one inch thick. Passing the compost through a ¾-inch screen makes it more easily spread and can be more readily assimilated than if put on in a rougher condition. This mulching should, with the aid of liquid feeding, keep the plants in good bearing condition till planting time.

To Beauty benches, which should now be making a heavy growth, this is indispensable, as without it many of the buds will fail to attain to a salable size. Those buds on extra strong soft canes of Beauties which fail to fully develop should be picked off instead of cutting down the stem. At the base of these buds will be found one or more buds, which in five or six weeks will form excellent flowers.

Young Beauty stock, which should now be in 3-inch pots, should be fumigated once a week, and syringed with some force twice every bright day. Keep all buds picked off, and give the plants plenty of room on the benches.

Those who have not already got their sod piled up, should have it collected and piled up as soon as possible before the heavy spring work commences.

Ribes.

VIOLETS.

In our last we spoke about caring for the plants promptly from the time they were first planted; this also refers to those planted outside, with only this difference, that not having paths to stand in as you have in the house, we plant about four rows, then skip a row for a path, and also plant the rows so that they can be worked with the hand cultivator, which you cannot do in the house as you have to plant too closely. To return to the house, if at any time you find any moss or fungus inclined to start in any spots, dust them over with air-slacked lime; it is good anyway, and can be used liberally, not getting it on the violets themselves, and if applied when the house is comparatively dry it bothers the slugs if a few have gotten in by some chance. It also sweetens and lightens up the house in the early winter.

Unless you have some special demand for very early violets you should keep the first crop of buds cut off the same as the runners; they are never very good at the best, and there is no market for violets until chrysanthemums are gone. I mean as a rule; of course there are exceptions occasionally for a funeral or some such purpose.

Dorsett's New Single Violet.

If you have grown your house nicely during the summer the critical time comes in the fall, when the days grow shorter and darker and the weather damp, raw and cold; especial care now has to be taken with the watering and ventilation. As soon as we begin to get over hot summer days you want to begin to thin off your shading on the glass, and consequently get your plants hardened up for the coming damp weather.

There is one thing which I do not think I have mentioned before, though I should have done so, and that is, when trimming runners be sure to handle the plants carefully, not cracking the leaf stems; always remembering that plants breathe through the leaves and every healthy leaf injured is an injury to the plant, and by the next time you go over the house you will find the leaf dying where you cracked the stalk the last time over. You will also find now that watering must be done less frequently and later in the morning, and never at night, as the plants must get dried off before sundown, for if the next day should be stormy and they stood damp for several days, a condition is created that predisposes to spot.

At about this time also you should begin to look out for the sow bug, or wood lice as some call them. We have found after many trials of different methods that paris green mixed with sugar (granulated) and spread along near the edge of the borders and between the rows, is the most effectual remedy. It does not have to be applied very often if you take care to put it on when the house is running dry; if put on before watering or soon after, of course it melts quickly and you lose the end you are after. Sow bugs do most of their feeding in the night, so if you can, without hurting the violets, let it stand two or three nights before you water again.

Returning to the ventilation again, keep your ventilators open just as long as you possibly can, even nights when you have light white frosts outside. Then there are days and nights, too, that are a puzzle, damp and rainy, when you have got to use a good deal of good judgment as to ventilation and experiment; we then consider it better to keep them open a little. When it really freezes nights so that you have to fire up a little, take care that you do not run it up too much; still keep some ventilation on, and only just keep the frost out of the house nicely. R. E. Shuphelt.

DORSETT'S NEW VIOLET.

This is a large-sized single-flowered violet which Mr. P. H. Dorsett, of Garrett Park, Md., has been growing for the past six years. In his large establishment, devoted entirely to violets, this new form has been decided upon as by far the most profitable of the singles to grow.

The principal merits which it possesses are its free-flowering qualities, delicately scented flowers, with stems at least 6 inches long, and the exceedingly useful foliage which is produced in such abundance that it can be used not only to dress bunches of its own flowers, but also those of the doubles; a single plant will give enough foliage to dress the flowers of three or four other plants. The leaves are broad, stiff, and of a beautiful, glossy green. During the present season the average number of flowers to a plant up to the first of March numbered 81, and at the present time the plants are dotted with myriads of dark purple blooms.

The origin of this plant is somewhat shrouded in mystery. It does not agree in description with any of the forms described in the books. It has been suggested as a possible cross between V. odorata and V. papilionacea. The latter is a spring-flowering native, and even indoors its season of flowering is rather short. The new form, on the other hand, is never without flowers, save for a month or two during the hot season, and even then it is crowded at the base with apetalous flowers. G. W. O.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.

In a paper read by Mr. John Doughty before the New Haven (Conn.), County Horticultural Society on March 4th, he described his method of growing this begonia as follows:

"The specimen Lorraine I have placed before you this evening is one of the twelve that obtained first honors at our exhibition on Nov. 6th, 1901, and has been in flower since the end of September, or a little over five months. All our plants were grown in 5-inch pots and this plant before us was not placed in the 8-inch pan before Jan. 23d, and I do not perceive that it is benefited much by the transfer, owing most probably to the lateness of the transfer. I find that their season for flowering is practically over by the end of February, as you will perceive there are but few more flowers thereon to expand, and the flowers are not so large and well formed as they were in midwinter.

"I have here before you rooted leaf stalks with the young growth issuing from the soil. I find they rooted very readily from the leaf stalks, as well as young shoots 2 or 3 inches long. They require to remain in the sand in which they are rooted for a considerable time, until they have formed minute tubers, very much resembling those of the dahlia but very irregular in outline, and when taken from the propagating sand are beautifully white. Those sufficiently advanced, I have pricked out into flats, as it gives less trouble than potting singly, though as you see I potted a few.

"Not having had further experience in this stage of their growth we will now assume that we have just received our consignment of small plants from the wholesale growers, and that it is the month of July, when we received our plants. They were from 2-inch pots and the plants themselves little larger than the money paid for them. I knew they were begonias, because I had been told so, therefore I treated them as such. Placing them in 2½-inch pots and using a compost of three-fifths decayed manure and two-fifths loam, with a little sand. They were placed upon the greenhouse bench under slight shade until growth commenced, when they received more light. They were potted into 3½-inch pots in August, and in September were placed into 5-inch pots, in which they were sold.

"The compost for the latter shift was about equal parts decayed manure and loam (not New Haven loam). I may here add that the manure used was from the horse barn. I never was a believer in cow manure for pot culture and I have yet to find its superiority over horse manure for any purpose save in a light sandy of gravelly garden or field. During September and October the plants grew very rapidly, soon forming dense growth, and by the end of October were good salable plants.

"I do not find any more difficulty in growing Lorraine than any other begonia. No begonia will thrive in a stagnant soil or a stagnant atmosphere, therefore the plants must be carefully watered and ventilated, especially during the winter. Lorraine will bear more light than any begonia I know of under glass. My experience is that it is well suited in a night temperature of about 55 degrees, and our house that they were flowering in was more frequently 50 at night, after cold weather set in.

"The plants did not receive any liquid manure but once, that at the end of November, for I was perfectly satisfied with the way they were growing, and decided to let well enough alone. In conclusion I would say, do not attempt at forcing the growth, watch carefully the growth as it proceeds, taking care that it is being well solidified, for upon the grower's judgment all depends whether success or failure follows. To treat plants one year the same as another is to court failure, the varying atmospheric conditions having a great influence upon vegetation in general."

CHRYSANTHEMUMS IN COLD FRAMES.

By William Scott.

[Read before the Tarrytown Hort. Society.]

The chrysanthemum is but one of many plants which the amateur flower lover may cultivate successfully. My reason for choosing it for my subject is because I consider it one of the easiest plants to cultivate and with proper care one that cannot fail to give satisfaction and pleasure to the cultivator. In treating the subject I will divide it in two sections: that of bush and the single stem plants.

In growing for bush plants the first difficulty the amateur encounters is getting his plants started early enough to give him a good foundation for large bushes. The best time to strike the cuttings for this purpose is about the beginning of February, but without the assistance of a hot-bed the amateur will be unable to strike cuttings this early, and as plants can be procured at a very small cost from any reliable florist, I would advise him to buy the few plants he will require for specimens. Any time after the middle of March they can be handled satisfactorily in a cold-frame, and if procured at that time from a florist should be planted at least four inches high and well rooted in small pots. As they will likely come out of warmer quarters than a cold-frame, it would be well to let them remain for a few days in the pots in which they are received, until they are somewhat acclimated, before attempting to shift them; but after about a week they can be safely transferred to 4-inch pots.

After they have got a hold of the fresh soil and made a little growth, the points should be pinched out to induce branching. Air must be admitted to the frame every day and regulated so that the temperature won't rise much above 65 degrees, but in the afternoon should be closed when the temperature begins to fall below this, so as to retain all the sun heat possible to help keep up the night temperature, and some sort of covering should be provided for the frames.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down in regard to watering, but the plants should be looked over once a day or even twice during very bright weather and water applied when the soil shows signs of dryness. But great care must be taken not to over water, as the plants are more likely to become sickly through too much water than not enough.

When the 4-inch pots are well filled with roots the plants should be shifted into sixes and later into 8-inch, and finally into twelves, which stage they will reach early in June. In making our compost heap in the fall we use four loads of sod to one of well rotted barnyard manure. After standing all winter this is ready for use for potting in the spring. Before using this is well chopped up to insure thorough mixing. For the first pottings we use a little leaf mould and sand, so as to render the compost somewhat lighter, but for subsequent pottings we use without these additions. But for the final potting we use a good sprinkling of bone meal, and if the soil is of a heavy nature some finely broken charcoal. In the last potting thorough drainage must be provided by using plenty of crocks in the bottom of the pots and the soil should be packed moderately firm. Pinching should begin as before stated when the plants are in 4-inch pots, and be continued according as the shoots attain a length of about three inches. Several shoots will be produced from each break and the stronger ones should be pinched out a day or two before the weaker ones, so as to give the latter a chance of strengthening.

After the end of July pinching should be discontinued and the plants allowed to make all the growth they can before setting their flower buds. The last of August or the beginning of September selecting the flower buds will have to be attended to. The exact date will depend upon the variety, some varieties setting earlier than others, but as a general rule with plants that have been kept pinched up to the end of July, it is safe to take the first bud that shows.

By taking the bud is meant the selecting of the central bud by removing all buds and shoots that appear around it. Here I would advise the inexperienced not to be too hurried, but to allow the buds to be sufficiently prominent, so that they can be removed without danger of injuring the central bud.

As growth goes on sufficient space must be allowed for development and the sashes heightened according as the plant requires it, plenty of air being given day and night after all danger of frost is over.

Throughout the growing season sufficient stakes should be placed in the plants to insure support and to bring the plants into shape, but the final staking should not be done until the buds begin to show color. Several methods of staking are adopted, some supporting every flower with an individual stake, others make a regular wire frame over the surface of which the blooms are evenly fastened. This latter plan makes the neatest looking plant, as it is easier to get the shoots well down over the pot and give the plant a more symmetrical form.

The varieties I would recommend for bush plants are Glory of the Pacific, pink, and its sport, Polly Rose, two good early dwarf varieties; A. J. Balfour, pink; Mrs. Robinson, white; October Sunshine and Robert Halliday, yellow; and G. W. Childs, red.

In growing plants for specimen blooms under cold frame culture, I consider the best time to strike the cuttings is from the first to the tenth of May. Then the amateur is at no disadvantage, as with greenhouses at my disposal I always prefer to strike my late cuttings in cold frames, as I find better results are obtained. A flat about three inches deep should be procured and filled with sharp sand; into this the cuttings should be placed about two inches apart, the sand being moderately damp, so that it can be well firmed around the cuttings. Keep well watered and keep the frame in which they are placed heavily shaded for the first few days until the cuttings begin to callous, after which more light can be allowed, but the shading should not be entirely removed until root action has taken place. The closer the frame can be kept the better while the cuttings are striking, as air has always a flagging influence. But as the shading is lightened, more air must be given to keep the temperature from rising too high.

When well rooted, pot up into 3-inch pots. When they are well filled with roots, pot into 6-inch pots, which will be found large enough to flower them in. Keep the plants growing to a single stem by removing all side shoots as they appear. Should buds appear previous to the end of August, they should be pinched out. Several shoots will result from this pinching and the strongest one should be taken up for a single stem, as before, all others being removed. The selecting of the bud largely depends on the variety.

The plants produce what are known as first crowns, second crowns and terminals. A crown bud is a bud surrounded by shoots. These shoots, if the bud is removed, will make more or less growth according to the variety before a bud is again produced, while a terminal bud is a bud surrounded by buds, designated terminal as it terminates the growth of the plant for the season.

Few varieties do well on the first crown, a notable exception being H. J. Jones, which must be taken on the first crown to give satisfactory results. I have also had some good flowers on the Madame Carnot variety from first crown buds, but as a rule the flowers come too dense to open properly, and with a long, bare neck. The second crown bud is the one from which the majority of varieties produce the best flowers. This as a rule is produced about the beginning of September. Though some of the earlier varieties will produce terminals about that time, again some varieties, such as Col. Appleton and Gold Mine, give the best results on the terminal bud, but the list of varieties is so long that it would take too long to enumerate them or to describe the bud most suitable to each. Suffice it to say that the denser the flower the later the bud may be taken, and as new varieties are constantly produced the grower can only learn by experience and a close study of his varieties just what buds he ought to select.

Opinions differ greatly regarding when feeding should be commenced, but my experience is that if the plant has had a suitable soil feeding is not necessary until after the buds have been taken, and if done much before is apt to produce soft, pithy growth. I invariably use liquid produced by soaking sheep manure, and take good care that it is not given stronger than the plants can take it up. Twice a week is often enough to apply it. I use sulphate of ammonia at the rate of one-fourth of an ounce to one gallon of water, applying it about six times in all, but discontinue it when the buds begin to color. Some varieties can be given more than others. Those that are inclined to damp should be given all the less. It should be borne in mind that sulphate of ammonia is more of a stimulant than a feeder, hence it should be changed off with other liquid manure and not given too often without intermission.

BRANCHED RUBBERS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a branched rubber plant grown by Mr. Fred. H. Dressel, Weehawken, N. J. Mr. Dressel's method of producing these branched plants is as follows:

He makes strong cuttings with six to eight leaves in November or December, putting in sand with a temperature of 70 to 80 degrees. They make roots in about three weeks, when they are potted in 3-inch pots and the pots replaced in the sand until the plants are thoroughly rooted. They are then changed to a house with a temperature of 60 to 70 degrees, shifting to larger pots as needed, and kept growing steadily.

The last of May or first of June the plants are taken out of doors, accustoming them gradually to the outside air and shading from the sun. The pots are plunged in the ground and the surface covered with two inches of well-rotted manure. They are thoroughly watered and syringed every night during the summer.

In September they are taken up and put in suitable sized pots, and put under shade for about two weeks, with the pots plunged in a foot of manure until the roots show around the pots, when the shade is removed.

The branching is entirely natural, no extraordinary method of any kind being used. The only "secret" is in the extra strength of the cuttings and keeping the plants always in a strong growing condition.

TOMATO FORCING.

The growing of tomatoes can be made very profitable in places where the Florida and Havana product does not come in competition. While the southern goods are not in the same class with the home grown product, owing to the fact that the fruit must be gathered when only just turned white in order to get it on the market in good shape, still to many people a tomato is a tomato, in January, and if they can buy tomatoes at 30 cents a lb., they hate to pay 50 cents. Still, there is generally a class of trade in any city that is willing to pay a higher price for a good article, and while I have seen tomatoes run as high as 75 cents, there is a margin of profit in them at 35 cents per lb. in midwinter, and gradually running down to 15 cents by June, providing a good crop is secured.

If one cannot devote a house to this crop, many plants can be grown in boxes at the warm dry ends of the houses; in fact, I would recommend a beginner to commence this way, in order to become familiar with handling the crop, for tomatoes are not the easiest of crops to grow.

Seed sown by the first of August will produce plants that should come into full bearing by Christmas, and if the plants keep free from disease and have sufficient head room, they will continue to bear fruit until May or June. Or seed can be sown in December to give a large spring crop. As soon as the seedlings are large enough to handle they should be pricked out into flats, and potted on as soon as they need it. An important point to observe is to keep the young plants as stocky and thrifty as possible.

If the plants are to be set out I would always recommend bench culture in preference to solid beds, because if the roots are not restricted the plants will often start to make a lot of rank growth instead of commencing to fruit. The plants may be kept to a single stem, and 18 inches apart is not too wide to plant. If two stems are taken up more space should be given.

The soil should be good fibrous loam with a little well rotted manure added, and should be firmly pounded to help keep the plants short jointed. Water sufficiently and do not let the paths get dry, but keep the water off the foliage if you do not wish to get your foliage diseased. In the bright weather of fall and spring the fruits will set easily enough, but during the winter months artificial pollination must be resorted to. This is easily accomplished by going over the flowers on bright mornings, when the atmosphere of the house is dry, with a small brush. This will rub the pollen on to the end of the pistil and the crop is thereby assured.

All side shoots should be removed, and if the head room is restricted the tips of the shoots can be taken out after each bunch of fruit that shows. New leaders will form quickly enough and the pinching can be repeated. I would not recommend this method where the plants have head room, because I think they keep stronger and more healthy if grown on uninterruptedly.

As regards temperature, 65 degrees nights and 75 degrees days will be found most satisfactory when the fruit is setting, but when the plants are small, 10 degrees lower will be much better to start them, as the young stock must be kept short jointed. It is claimed by some growers that rooting cuttings, and growing them on is preferable to raising seedlings, because they keep more dwarf. Possibly they may, but I prefer the seedlings, which have more native vigor and are consequently not so prone to disease.

The worst enemy of the tomato is a fungus, named Phytophora, according to Nicholson. This is identical with the fungus that attacks the potato leaf, and when the plants are badly infested it seems hopeless to try to eradicate it. I have seen it grow right through Bordeaux when that mixture has been applied. This disease may in any but the most unfavorable seasons be kept away by never spraying the foliage, and seeing that the atmosphere is always pure and dry on wet days and foggy nights. A little white fly is a bad pest sometimes. Persistent fumigation will get the better of him, but he dies hard.

It will be found that bone meal is the best fertilizer to use for tomatoes, but it should not be used until a crop of fruit is set. When the vines are in full bearing they need lots of feeding to sustain them, but if fertilizers are applied before this period, a quick soft growth will result that will not set fruit until the fertilizer is getting exhausted.

Many people have become discouraged on seeing their tomatoes run up six feet and not a fruit to show. Too much nitrogen is responsible for this, but once a good crop of fruit is set the plants will stand liquid applications of nitrate of soda, cow manure, or almost anything in reason. The best results I ever saw were obtained by using bone meal in conjunction with nitrate of potash, the potash being used in the proportion of one ounce potash to four gallons of water. Potash in some form or other is one of the great essentials of successful fruit growing of any description.

TORONTO.

Toronto is such a short run from this cold, clean and asphalted city that we might take a three hours' ride by rail in winter or the enjoyable four hours' trip by boat in the summer time oftener than we do to our profit. But we went a few days ago, principally to see a new metal gutter which is to be seen at Walter Muston's, at North Toronto. It is all right, but it was too late for us to alter our plans. The new range of fine houses was growing Brides and Maids in fine style. After an hour or two spent with Mr. Muston in discussing culture and building, he went along to show us the shortest and quickest route to John Dunlop's.

I have told many a florist on this side of the Niagara to visit Dunlop of Toronto, and Dale of Brampton if they wanted to see roses done well. But roses are not all that is to be seen at the corner of Lansdowne and Bloor street, Toronto, Ontario. Every time I visit John he has added to the place and now it is about 150,000 feet of glass. There are several larger places in the world, but not many where every foot tells. A dozen carnation houses are looking well, and I was glad to see several varieties that I had not previously seen growing. Among the newer varieties Lorna was wonderful for quantity and size of flower. The comparatively little grown Glacier was also grand, and Mr. Dunlop thinks it as good an all around white as there is. He says he has no fault to find with Marquis, as it has flowered continuously and profusely since early November. Lawson is here in its usual unequaled form, and strange to say, a bench of the almost forgotten Olympia. Olympia is grand, a perfect flower when well grown. A bench about six feet wide and over 200 feet long is full of transplanted cuttings of all the desirable varieties and a most healthy, strong lot they are.

Several houses were devoted to Easter stuff, lilies, Ramblers, hydrangeas, etc., but we do not need so much education in that line as in growing, and more particularly propagating, roses. It's a treat to look at house after house of Brides and Maids and Meteors, and two or three of Beauties and one of Liberty. Morgan they also grow very finely, and here you will see Perle, Sunset and Sunrise. Most of the rose houses except the new range are short span to the south, twenty feet wide, and although it is not likely any more of this style will be built, you cannot condemn the houses when you see such beautiful roses produced.

The new range was most interesting to me. There are five or six houses, I am not sure which, each 20 by 150 feet, no partition between the whole lot. Of course they run north and south, are equal span and the gutters are seven feet high, supported by iron arches, so the path is under the gutter. The benches are two and one-half or three feet high in this range, but Mr. Dunlop admits that they would be quite as well nearer the ground. No, there is no use in discussing this style of house, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and what is more convincing to me is the remark of Mr. D. when he said, "I like them. I shall build more like them." I don't pretend to have seen many rose-growing places, but I have never in my life seen a more healthy, productive and finer flowered lot of roses.

The difference between the grafted stock and own root stuff in these houses (mostly Brides and Maids) was most striking. The grafted stock were stronger plants, producing more flowers, and Mr. Dunlop assured me that planted at the same date the cut from grafted stock was nearly 50 per cent more than from own roots. Mr. Dunlop is a thorough disciple of grafting, and hence his success. We heard of a place this season where they took out of the frame 100 per cent. He does not pretend to do that, but I can vouch for what I saw. There were not, apparently, any failures, but he was honest enough to say that 98 per cent had been "his luck" this year. He has it down to an exact science.

There are many other little items I could say about this neat, well run place. But I will only say that when near that part of the Canadian border don't fail to go and see John Dunlop, who may not go out and play bowls with you, but who will take the greatest pleasure in showing a student around his model place.

The Market.

There is a very good supply of stock in the market but demand is brisk and prices were about up to Easter quotations by Wednesday. The weather has been bright and warm for the past five days, and conditions are certainly very favorable for a good supply at Easter. We hear of growers who are between crops, and whom the very best possible conditions would not help at present, because they have little or nothing in sight for the sun to open, but from what we learn here and there we are inclined to believe that by Friday and Saturday there will be an unusually large supply in the market, except of lilies, medium length Beauties and possibly other red roses.

There was a remarkable dearth of violets in the market early in the week and the only reasonable explanation is that they are probably being held back for Easter. If so, a very bad blunder is being made by the growers, for stale violets are about as worthless stuff as express charges can be wasted upon. That some of the champion picklers are at work was evidenced by some carnations noted in the market as early as Monday. The "brine" was thick upon them, and flowers in the center of the bunches were in an advanced stage of decay. Of course they were a total loss to the grower.

But there will be a lot of good stock in the market and if the outside florist finds himself running short of anything outside of lilies and medium length Beauties we feel sure he can get it in this market. Easter quotations will be found in the adv. of the Chicago Wholesale Cut Flower Association in this issue.

Various Items.

Construction was started Tuesday on the eight new houses of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., at Morton Grove. Four of them will be 23½x200, and the others will be 23½x281, 23½x400, 23½x360 and 27½x250. All but the last named will be planted with Beauties, giving them 16,000 more plants to cut from, making a total of 35,000 Beauty plants for the coming season. The houses are separate, being 16 feet apart. The large shipping demand for Beauties during the past season determined them to put almost all of their new glass into Beauties. The material for the new houses is being supplied by the Jno. C. Moninger Co.

John Mangel has given up the lease on his store at State and Washington streets, and has leased the store now occupied by John C. Schubert & Co., corner of Wabash and Monroe. He will take possession May 1. Mr. Schubert will retire from the business.

H. C. Rowe, for some years past manager for Mr. Schubert, will start in business on his own account at 35 Monroe street, in the Windsor-Clifton Hotel building.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. recently made a floral pall or casket cover containing about 15,000 violets and 10,000 lily of the valley. It was a very handsome piece of work.

Mrs. R. C. Manley is about to open a floral store at 2956 State street.

Dominick Nicas, a Greek florist, was held up a few nights ago and robbed of $70.

The second annual entertainment and ball of the Chicago Florists' Club will be held in the Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Tuesday evening, April 8th. The entertainment commences at 8 o'clock. Tickets for gentlemen and lady are $1, and may be had from the committee and at the wholesale houses.

J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind., was a visitor this week.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held at the usual place Wednesday evening.

The growers and the wholesalers who tied for first place in the recent tournament have decided to divide the money and not play off the tie. They have other games to play now as the club has joined the West Chicago League, in which there are many crack teams and in which they will get some lively practice that should keep them in good trim. They made a good start last Thursday evening, making team totals of 906, 900 and 862, with a five-man team. The other prizes won in the late tournament will be presented to the winners at the Florists' Club's entertainment the evening of April 8.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for March 17–22.

Business has been just fairly good, and as material has been shortened by bad weather, prices have kept up fairly well on an average. Figures fluctuated during the week on all lines of goods, starting out with a downward tendency, but quickly regaining, being helped in the upward movement by visions of Easter looming up through the mist.

Small roses, however, have stood firm all the week, caused first by a little order for 7,000 at a low figure for Monday morning, secured by Mann Bros. This took away the surplus, and that kind has been scarce ever since. The red rose situation is getting slightly inflamed, caused by the increase of Jacks and the influx of quite a few Ulrich Brunners, as well as the gradual rise of a crop of Beauties, Meteors and Liberties. With good weather during the coming week all kinds of material will stand a heavy drain for Easter.

There is not a grower of any size in the business who uses steam trains in his service but can tell an interesting story about the history of his shipping boxes. Among us the question is no longer "What becomes of the pins?" but "What becomes of the boxes?" No matter how closely they are followed up, they are prone to go astray, and either disappear entirely or return looking like the man who takes second money at a prize-fight. And when they do return, no man can tell where they have been nor how they got back. An average life of one year is conceded to a good, strong box, and I can point to you a man who boasts of boxes two years old, and as they are of seven-eighths material bound all around with mail-plate welded together, one would think them good enough for ten years at least. And they look ten years old now.

I think the whole trouble lies with the "baggage smasher" on the train. The kind of boxes florists have been using mostly just suits him, and his soul delighteth in their destruction. He learns to throw out a nest of them so as to break their backs over a railroad iron with great neatness and dispatch. His broadest smile is caused by the recollection of the times when he threw boxes out at the wrong station and saw the wrong man go off with them (?). Once in a great, great while, too, some one borrows a box, and once in a greater, greater while he returns it.

There are two vastly different methods in vogue to offset all this. One is to use such cheap boxes and have so many of them that the loss of a few makes no difference, since they are tied up with a cheap rope. The other is to use nice, well-painted boxes, strapped together with a dollar's worth of leather or webbing, and when they are lost to go to the highest official of the road that carries them. It is of no use to approach the rank and file. Keep away from the man who works for wages. He does not know how to use you decently and does not seem to want to. Strike for his boss, who draws a salary, and the higher the salary he gets the more gentlemanly he can afford to use you. State your case properly and you will be heard.

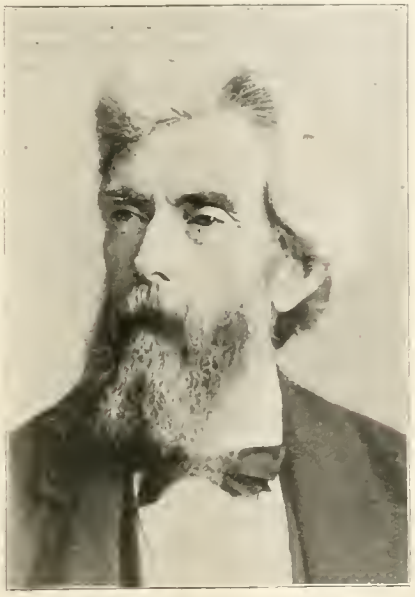
OBITUARY.

James Pentland.

James Pentland, the veteran florist of Baltimore, Md., died at his home in that city March 19, aged 80 years.

He was born in Grey Abbey, County Downe, in the north of Ireland. When a youth his parents moved to Kendall, England, and in 1832 he came to the United States and settled in Philadelphia. Mr. Pentland, after several years' apprenticeship in Philadelphia, came to Baltimore in 1844, and was employed in Greenmount Cemetery as a gardener. In 1849 he bought the property opposite the cemetery gate, where he still carried on the business at the time of his death.

As common to the gardeners of that day, he grew bedding stuff, roses, nursery stock, exotic grapes and cut flowers, going to market to dispose of his products, taking contracts to plant country estates, and keeping city gardens trim, etc. He soon began to pay particular attention to the production of roses—the garden sorts—and enlarged his operations in this direction until, at the time of the civil war, his annual output was about 100,000 roses, from pots, he having in his houses 750 sorts from which stock was propagated. He engaged in hybridizing varieties and produced several which were well received by the trade, notably George Peabody and Beauty of Greenmount (Bourbons), Woodland Margaret (Noisette), and Doctor Kane (hybrid tea). Mr. Pentland for many years cultivated extensively the camellia, and raised some fine seedlings of his own, of which Gen. Robt. E. Lee, carmine, spotted white; Stonewall Jackson, white, striped scarlet; Anna, a beautiful pink, were conspicuously meritorious.



The Late James Pentland.

Mr. Pentland's long association with the flower trade of the country, the noteworthy collection of roses so long maintained by him and attracting many visitors, filled him with reminiscences both curious and interesting, which were dear to his memory. He recalled, after more than sixty-five years, that at Mr. Fetters', in Philadelphia, he potted the first plants coming to America of Souvenir d'un Ami, Hermosa, Mme. Bosanquet, La Reine, and Mme. Laffay.

Of the tough fiber which is the outgrowth of North Irish, or Scotch-Irish blood, he carried his eighty years jauntily, his head silvered, but his eye as bright, his heart as light as a boy's, his step unfaltering, his spirit undaunted. For two-thirds of a century he worked with a trowel and knife and spade, at the bench, in the trench and in the nursery row, and worked, too, just like he played—with all his might. He was known for his frank speech, and friend as well as foe was likely to get the rough side of his keen tongue if he deserved it. But, friend or foe, clerk or layman, was sure of getting honest, fair treatment; and his word was ever his bond.

Outside of his business, too, Mr. Pentland has led in many activities and been much honored by his fellow men. One term he represented this city in the legislature of Maryland. For many years he was a prominent manager of the the Maryland Institute, the local School of Art and Design. For one year he was president of the Gardeners' Club, presiding with skill and vigor. He was one of the oldest Masons in the State, esteemed by the whole craft, and with many testimonials of their affection and respect in shape of services of silver, diplomas, jewels, etc.

At the funeral the floral tributes from his many friends in the trade were numerous and elaborate. A wreath of lilies, roses and carnations was sent by the Gardeners' Club, and there were others from individual members.

He leaves a widow and three children, the latter being James J. D. Pentland, Wm. P. L. Pentland and Miss May Hazel Pentland.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The market was very active last week; there was no great scarcity of any one thing, and the wholesale men were pretty well cleaned up every night. Demand for first-class stock was good, particularly so of roses and carnations. Violets are selling well, that is home grown, which are disposed of in large quantities, and often at low figures. In bulb stock valley shows up finely, with demand fair; tulips, except white, are very slow; same may be said of daffodils; Dutch hyacinths have a good call, but only the lighter shades; Harrisiis and callas are naturally up in price; of these the supply is going to be scarce for Easter sales.

The season of spring openings at several of our large establishments kept our greenhouse men quite busy the past week with decorative work. This made an extra demand for galax, both green and bronze, the demand for which is improving. Smilax and other greens were also freely used.

There never was such a demand for funeral designs as last week. Every florist in the city had nearly all he could handle, and all kinds of white flowers were eagerly bought up, and our wholesale men say that white stock had the greatest call last week of any week during this season.

The general opinion among the florists is that there will be a shortage of cut stuff for Easter and especially of lilies, and no doubt the prices will go up as all the growers around here lost all of their Harrisiis, and most of them have only callas to sell. Some of the Harrisiis seen in the stores and the market are small and look sickly. In other flowers the cut has been small for some time past, but should the bright weather continue the chances are that the cut will be fairly good; but in any case, nothing will be over-plentiful unless it may be bulb stuff. Shipping orders are quite brisk at the wholesale houses and, judging from this, growers at other places must also be suffering the shortage.

Easter prices will no doubt take effect to-morrow (Tuesday) with the following prices:

Beauties, extra select, from $4 to $6; shorts, from 75 cents to $2 per doz.; Brides, Maids, Meteors and Gates, from $5 to $10; Perles, $4 to $5; seconds, $3 to $4 per 100. Carnations, fancy, $4 and $5; others from $2 to $3 per 100. Violets from 25 to 75 cents per 100. Harrisiis from $12.50 to $18; Callas, $10 to $15; tulips, $3 to $5; Romans, $2 and $3; Dutch, $3 to $5; lily of the valley, $3 to $5. On green stock prices will remain the same as usual.

Bowling.

The Florist Bowling Club is now without a home—the Court House alleys are a thing of the past. New alleys will soon be built by the St. Louis Tenpin League, and in the meantime the club will bowl at the Grand alleys, and after the Easter rush will bowl regularly again.

The league team made the following averages during the league season:

Easter Stock.

A temperature of over 60 degrees, a summer sun and skies that rival the violets such are the conditions that usher in the final week of Lent and give promise of the greatest plant Easter the metropolis has ever known. Already the growers are taking advantage of the propitious weather and delivery wagons are on every street. Not a plant worth selling apparently remains unengaged. A visit to some of the large greenhouse establishments on Saturday confirms this. Over at Fritz Dressel's, in West Hoboken, the whole force was busy wrapping up for delivery stock already purchased, and "everything sold" was the watchword there. Mr. Dressel's first try at the lily venture was a ten-strike; every plant perfect and every flower sold.

Good potted lilies everywhere have commanded 12 cents a flower this year. I haven't heard of one contract for less, and the selects have brought in some cases 15 cents. The azaleas, hydrangeas, genistas, acacias and Crimson Ramblers make up 90 per cent of the stock, and the wisdom of the selection is evident from the fact that not a perfect plant of these varieties remains unsold.

Over at Mr. Steinhoff's the activity of preparation was at high tide. A score of packers were hustling, several subjects of the Mikado among them. Here, Crimson Rambler is king; 10,000 plants ranging from $1 to $25 attest the ability of this house with this popular specialty. Wreath and cross effects have been produced for the day, and the wealth of bloom is worth going miles to see. Herman Scholzel, at Union Hill, had a splendid exhibit, but this time nothing will be left out of 5,000 azaleas, 15,000 lilies, 1,000 hydrangeas and 2,000 small genistas. Over at Julius Roehrs' the usual grand accumulation of superb stock breaks the record of this house. It would take too much space to describe it.

Close at hand the vigorous and ambitious young establishment of Bobbink & Atkins is making a successful bid for an abundant patronage, and in a few years has taken its place among the leaders in every department of horticulture. On "the other side of the bridge," Schultheis and Will Siebrecht and Zeller and Millar and Dyer and Le Mare and other growers of Flatbush and Astoria and the "suburbs," all heavily stocked, report every plant of value taken.

It will be a great Easter if the weather behaves itself. Hard to realize, unless you are on the ground, what the outlet can possibly be for this enormous aggregation of stock. I wish you could join the promenade on Fifth avenue Easter and see, too, how the wholesale cut flower men have added their quota to the general result. No more low prices nor surplus of violets and roses!—the general average has asserted itself. From depression and accumulation have come demand and good fair offerings that will deplete the ice boxes.

The Stores.

Talking about Fifth avenue, a stroll from 34th to 59th streets Saturday found most of the great stores in an embryo condition. Broadway was far ahead in the way of attractive florist windows, but Friday will usher in such a completeness of beautiful effects on this great stylish thoroughfare as has not been seen in a generation.

J. H. Troy, at the "Rosary," 388 Fifth avenue, had a pretty outdoor Japanese effect in maples and evergreens, lilacs, wistarias and tree paeonias in pots, with hyacinths, lilies and rhododendrons, filled the window. Mr. Troy is very proud of his latest invention, "an English gardening basket," a handy and practical affair which he has patented and will use for cut flower effects at Easter.

At Siebrecht's, 409 Fifth avenue, the large display windows were nicely arrayed, violets in fancy baskets predominating. Birch bark baskets, orchids, acacias, rhododendrons and Ramblers completed the present supply, while at the firm's branch store in the Arcade, further up the avenue, the conservatory was filled with grand specimen ferns and palms, and the store windows were brilliant with azaleas and acacias.

Wadley & Smythe, at 491, had about the only gardenias in the city, in novel vases flanked by cypripediums and Asparagus Sprengeri, with an abundance of the fancy carnations, and a handsome, dainty, new style of pot cover made of chiffon with ribbon found nowhere else in the city. Mr. Wadley is convalescing rapidly at his home in New Rochelle, but is hardly strong enough to take up his usual duty in the Easter rush. Great preparations are being made by this house for the Newport season.

At 538 Dards has some pretty and novel designs in white immortelles and the usual flowering plants and lilies. Across from Dards' is Thorley's, at 543, where the immense windows with their purple velvet pillars and enormous vases and huge baskets of lilies are charming, while at 546 is Alex. McConnell, with his deep front and lavish window display. Hodgson's, at 719, was depleted of everything extraneous in preparation for "great expectations," and at 761, Stumpp's, palms and azaleas were a "makeshift" for the present.

Notes.

The illness of Thomas Young, Sr., continues very severe and a fatal termination is feared. Mr. Nash and Mr. Schenck are better, and Rudolph Asmus is again "on the Rialto."

The sale of nursery stock at the auction rooms is on and buyers are becoming numerous. Roses easily command 10 cents and other stock, with few exceptions, secures bidders at a greater than the usual wholesale rates.

Many out-of-town florists have visited New York during the past ten days; John Degnan, of the McKellar & Winterson Co., Chicago; H. H. Battles, of Philadelphia, and Breitenstein, Ulam and McClements, of Pittsburg, among them.

A. Herrmann, the importer and dealer in florists' supplies, is having his place completely fitted with electric lights.

According to a report in the daily press the Bermuda bulb growers did not ship any flowers to this city this year for the reason that they didn't have any to ship.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market underwent a change last Saturday. Prices did not advance, but stock was well cleared up, a tremendous business being done that day. The bull movement continued this week and up to time of writing these notes a great cut flower Easter seems assured. Advance orders for Easter lilies, long Beauties, carnations and valley are heavy, with probability of a good supply.

Pierson, of Cromwell, is shipping quantities of Easter lilies to this market; $15 a hundred is the price for fine Easter lilies.

Easter Plants.

The plant market is tremendously active. The great bulk of flowering plant stock in the hands of the wholesale growers is engaged at this writing. Several car loads have been shipped to New York alone. Lilies, rhododendrons and hydrangeas are practically sold out. Should the week end with the wonderfully fine weather which has marked its commencement, we will have the best Easter on record.

Spring Exhibition.

The spring show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held on March 18, 19 and 20 in Horticultural Hall. The extremely cold weather cut down the exhibits and the attendance. The show was very interesting and drew a fair attendance, which should make the secretary and the exhibitors feel that their efforts have been made to good purpose.

The features of the main hall were a specimen of Pandanus Sanderii, set round by some choice stove and foliage plants; a group of Cineraria stellata, wonderfully fine; another of new geraniums, the plants exceptionally well grown and flowered; and two large groups, one of foliage and one of flowering plants, both very fine. In the foyer were the bulbs for the seedsmen's prizes, and a finer collection of hyacinths, tulips and daffodils has never been seen here. This bulb show alone was worth coming a long way to see.

The roses and carnations came on the second day. Adonis won the president's $50 cup as the best carnation not yet disseminated. The Marquis, Prince Henry and Mrs. Van Rensselaer all made a fine appearance. There were three superb vases of Beauties and one of Liberty. There were two vases of Mrs. Ames and one each of Ivory, Balduins, Miss Alice Roosevelt and Ulrich Brunner. The rose table was very effective, all the blooms being good and the colors prettily varied. Curiously enough there were no Brides or Maids.

The winners of prizes were mainly private gardeners.

West Philadelphia.

William K. Harris has an enviable reputation for Easter plants, and, in fact, for everything he grows. He had a great house of genistas, beautifully shaped plants full of bright yellow flowers, the color intensified by being well hardened. His hydrangeas were half pink and half blue, a house or so of each. The lilies were reduced in numbers by the dread disease. Rhododendrons and bougainvilleas were very fine. There were double spireas and a great quantity of daffodils, single and double, very evenly flowered. Also tulips and bleeding hearts. Last, but not least, the azaleas were extremely fine.

Sharon Hill.

Robert Scott & Son had two large houses of lilies, divided into four grades, the highest of $15 grade being taken first. Their Ramblers, mentioned last week, were the most perfect ever seen in this city. These are the only Easter plants grown, the rest of the place being devoted to roses. A large house of Brides and Maids is in full crop for Easter. Beauties are producing some fine, long-stemmed flowers. Liberty looks well. Three new houses built last fall and used for Easter plants and young stock will be planted in Liberty this summer, grafted plants of this variety being preferred here to own roots. There is a very fine stock of young Kaiserins grafted, and of Beauties on their own roots.

The glass devoted to testing Alexander Dickson & Sons' rose seedlings is of deep interest. There are two or three varieties that may be heard from next season. It is curious that one variety, which, when grown outdoors at Belfast, bore flowers brighter in color than American Beauty, here, under glass, produces blooms of a dull shade of pink, most undesirable. Another variety of strong growth which never came blind at Belfast has never flowered here, although it grows tremendously. The variety Robert Scott seems unlikely to fully meet our market requirements, though a fine flower of exquisite color.

An immense quantity of small roses are grown for Burpee & Co.'s shipping trade. Gardenias are being tried and should produce a fine crop of bloom in June. This place bears abundant evidence of prosperity and reflects credit on Mr. Scott and his foreman, Mr. Munro.

Notes.

John Burton expects to add a house to his new place this summer for Meteors.

John I. Heibeck, Oxford, Pa., will build three new houses this summer; it is understood that they are for carnations.

Simon Brothers, Wilmington, Del., are building three houses, to be devoted to carnations. Two are 175x20 and one 220x16.

William H. Vance, Wilmington, Del., expects to move his six houses of carnations this summer to a new piece of ground, and will add another house.

Correction: It was J. J. Habermehl's Sons who sent samples of their Easter stock to S. S. Pennock's spring opening, and not J. B. Habermehl, as incorrectly stated last week.

The employes of a leading cut flower commission house in this city object to a recent statement in a contemporary that business has been dull around the wholesalers. They say they have been just as busy as they possibly could be, often working until late in the evening.

Henry A. Dreer Co. had some fine blooms of the yellow daisy Doronicum at the exhibition last week.

Wishing all fellow laborers a full return for their toil at this Easter season, and that these lines may find an echo in some hearts. PHIL.

FOR SOME ONE.

I wonder why I toil away?
My heart replies: "For some one!"
Why may I never rest a day?
Because—because of "some one."
I hear the tramp of many feet,
I hear the racket in the street,
But over all I hear the sweet—
Sweet little laugh of "some one."

His work is never hard to do
Who thinks all day of some one;
He labors well whose heart is true—
And fondly true—to some one!
Men strive for wealth—men bravely go
Where danger is for fame, but oh!
The sweetest joy a man may know
Is just to toil for some one!

BUFFALO.

Supreme Court of Buffalo, Part 2—"Murphy against Indiana Bridge Co." John G. Milburn, counsel for the defense. Juror waiting to be called and earning double pay by serving the people and writing for pay at the same time.

Last week our avenues and orchards were joyous with the song of the robin and a dialogue I heard between two of the latest arrivals amused me. The brightest breasted of the two remarked to his more sombre but sweet looking companion: "I think I met you last year somewhere in this tree. You are looking very pretty." The reply was, as near as I could make out, with her head bowed but slightly on one side: "I have been watching you all winter on the Gulf coast and you have been fairly good, but don't pretend to be a stranger. If you mean business drop your taffy, come off your perch and let's go to work." But a cold spell came and, alas! work and all domestic industries were suspended and poor redbreast was hiding beneath a brush pile.

St. Patrick's day and its green emblems seems to have been more generally observed than in years past, but I don't believe it means much to the florist. J. H. Rebstock had green callas, green carnations, green roses, in fact everything about the store, except the proprietor, was green.

It is not so easy to say how the stock for Easter is going to be. Without mentioning any names, I would call it spotty. I hear of more than one grower whose lilies can be called "nix," and I am inclined to think that this important plant will be in brisk demand, but of other plants there will be an abundance. W. J. Palmer has a splendid lot of lilies. C. F. Christensen has a good, clean lot, and there are a good many hundreds at Cold Springs.

Carnations were coming in very fast until the cold spell shortened them up. Roses got down to bargain counter prices, but that is over for the present.

It was reported that W. F. Kasting had rented Convention Hall as a distributing point for plants received from many points, but that is not so. It is as large a hall but one more adjacent to his cut flower house. W. S.

CINCINNATI.

Easter Prospects.

With Easter so near, our market is in anything but a satisfactory condition. Still, I suppose it is caused more by the holding back of stock than anything else. That carnations are going to be 'way short is easily seen by everyone. Every mail brings orders that it will be impossible to fill and disappointed customers form one of the hardest nuts for wholesalers to crack.

Fortunately the supply of bulbous stock will be ample and of extra good quality. There will be enough for everyone, as this market is well supplied in this line.

At the present time it looks as if roses will be about equal to the demand, and if this is the case it will help out the carnations a good deal.

Harrisii are likely to be in larger supply than at first anticipated and some very good stock can be had at $15 per 100.

There will be a great supply of violets, mostly in double varieties, and with good weather there will be no trouble in disposing of them. All in all, we are looking forward to the best Easter ever experienced in this vicinity.

Various Items.

J. A. Peterson is holding an auction this week at which plants and cut flowers are being sold to the highest bidder without reserve.

Last Tuesday the temperature fell to 8 degrees above zero. A strong wind was blowing, making it very hard to keep up temperature in greenhouses. Geo. Murphy suffered the loss of a house of carnations that were in fine shape for Easter, by freezing.

On Saturday, in the Jabez Elliott flower market, nearly all the stands were occupied and a very good trade was reported. Easter is the harvest time for the florists in this market, and on Saturday next its fifty-odd stands will be one mass of bloom. The sight is equal to a flower show and draws immense crowds of people.

Mr. Schramm, of Schramm Bros., Marietta, O., was a caller this week, also Mr. J. F. Berdigen, Aurora, Ind., Mr. Weltz, Wilmington, O., and Miss White and Miss Troupe, of Lexington, Ky.

Adonis much has already been said and writen, but tongue and pen are scarcely capable of describing the glory of color and growth and size. Lorna was the best of the whites and doubtless is one of the varieties that have come to stay.

At E. T. Graves' plant the main feature is Dorothy, and well worthy is this carnation of being the main feature anywhere. At present it was a trifle off crop, but judging from the number of cuttings that have been taken off this was to be expected. Mr. Graves said that the demand for cuttings was much larger than the supply, which speaks well of this variety. Their new prize winner, Pres. McKinley, had no flowers, but from the plants I could tell it had a fine growth and was a very healthy variety.

At Fulle Bros., and Chessman & Schepman I found things in fine shape for Easter and all were predicting a very lively trade. C. J. Ohmer.

NOT UNREASONABLE.

A young man with an impediment in his speech went to a stammerers' institute and asked for a course of treatment. The professor, who, according to the Independent, had an eye to the main chance, asked him if he wanted a full or a partial course.

"How much of a partial course?"

by William Scott

Is a book of 224 pages, and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half tone engravings. It is

KANSAS CITY, MO.

To make a summary of trade conditions during the Lenten season, both grower and retailer ought to feel jubilant, for there was a brisk demand for all good material and prices averaged higher than a year ago. The call for funeral work was unusually large and counter trade all that could be expected. The only unprofitable flower and which meets with disfavor with the public is the colored tulip.

From the amount of entertaining and decorating being done it is evident that society does not observe Lent as rigidly as in former years. One of the largest decorations executed here recently was arranged and given the artistic finish by our "Willie" at the Baltimore Hotel for the banquet given in honor of Mr. A. E. Stillwell, "railroad promoter," and his distinguished English guests. The large banquet hall was loosely festooned with southern smilax, and huge bunches of American Beauties were used lavishly on the tables and around the hall, and by way of novelty and very suggestive, the head end of a locomotive was perfectly designed, illuminated with small incandescent lights and draped with American and British flags.

Weather is quite springlike and everybody is astir preparing for the Easter rush. We look for a scarcity of cut flowers, but in plants there will be sufficient with the exception of lilies.

The encroaching of the department stores on the floral trade is a menace which confronts us at this writing. Last year we had only one competitor of this kind; now we have three who give regular sales every Saturday. Stock is shipped in here by the wagon load and sold at "cut rate" prices. To what extent these cheap sales affect the local florists may be judged from the fact that last Saturday one dry goods house sold 20,000 carnations at 1c each and 5,000 roses at 4c each, and how do they do it?

Paul Decret, the Union Cemetery florist, died suddenly of appendicitis at his home on the 12th inst. He was a native of Switzerland and had been in America twenty-five years. Mr. Ducret was successful in business and a man much esteemed by the craft. The florists of the city sent handsome floral tributes for the funeral, and deeply sympathize with the family in their bereavement.

Uncle John Thorpe came here two weeks ago to see Mr. Taggart and discuss business pertaining to the flower show to be held here next November. Uncle John stated that every effort will be made to surpass the show given last year, and the amount in premiums to be offered will reach the magnificent sum of $7,000. H. J. M.

In our next issue we wish to print a full report of the Easter trade. Please send us a report from your city, mailing same on Monday.

PIPE JOINTS.

We wish to pipe a new range of about 15,000 feet of glass, using 3½-inch old boiler flues. How many pounds' pressure will a joint made in the following manner stand?

We put the flues end against end and use a piece of 5-inch wrought iron pipe 12 inches long for a collar. Then we take oakum (without any oil of tar on it), thoroughly soaked in the best Portland cement, and pack from both sides at the same time until within 1½ inches of the outer edge, this space being filled with pure cement.

This joint is all right for a gravity system, but in our new plant we intend to use hot water pumped under pressure and will have about 40 pounds pressure.

How about using iron filings and silicate? W. C. V.

In reply to the inquiry of W. C. V., I have used such joints as he describes satisfactorily against pressure of 18 to 20 pounds, but have had no experience with such joints against heavier pressure, but if he makes due provision in constructing the coils, for the strains of longitudinal expansion and contraction of the pipe lines, I believe such carefully made joints would withstand the pressure of 40 pounds. The cement joints for this purpose would be better than the rust joints, as the expansion taking place in the rust joints in the process of rusting would have a tendency to split the wrought iron sleeves.

THE TORONTO CARNATION SHOW.

The fourth annual carnation exhibit was held in the Horticultural Pavilion on Thursday, March 13. The number of exhibits was not as large as last season, but the quality more than made up the difference. It was very noticeable the splendid condition in which the flowers from the United States arrived compared with last year.

The only prize offered was a silver cup by the Toronto Horticultural Society, and it was won by the E. G. Hill Co. with Adonis. In close competition with the above were Marquis, Empire State, and the Chicago Carnation Company's Potter Palmer.

Among the other meritorious exhibits were: Cressbrook, from C. Warburton; Enquirer, from R. Witterstaetter; Dorner & Son's four new varieties; Bassett & Washburn's seven varieties; Chicago Carnation Company showed several new seedlings not yet disseminated; J. Gammage & Sons, London, showed some good Marquis and Glacier, also some seedling pelargoniums of promise; the Dale Estate showed a vase of very fine Roosevelt and Lorna; W. Fendly, of Brampton, made an excellent exhibit of Violet Princess of Wales, it being very fine; he also showed a vase of Scotts that would make some of the newer, high-toned varieties stand in the shade; Dunlop made the largest exhibit, showing sixteen varieties; also some good azaleas; R. Jennings, Brampton, made a good exhibit of the older varieties, showing the possibilities of these varieties when in the hands of a good grower; W. J. Lawrence made a good exhibit of carnations, roses and lilies; W. Jay & Son's table of plants and cut flowers showed some well-grown stock; Manton Bros. were the only exhibitors of orchids, showing some well-grown specimens; Exhibition Park made a fine exhibit of a lot of well-grown plants, consisting of azaleas, genistas, begonias, palms, ferns and bulbs.

The attendance was rather disappointing in the afternoon, but in the evening large crowds viewed the show.

Amongst older varieties, Glacier was much in evidence and the way Canadian boys grow it it takes a good one to beat it. Marquis and Lawson are holding their own, and from all accounts will be planted in large quantities for next season.

Messrs. Dicks, of London, and George Manton, of Eglington, were the judges.

A meeting of the executive committee of the C. H. A. was held in the evening to set the date for the next meeting in Hamilton next August, and to transact other business. LOND.

POMONA, N. C.—The J. Van Lindley Nursery Co. are at work on the construction of two more greenhouses, one 16x85 and the other 33x200, for carnations and other cut flowers. They find this step necessary owing to the great demand for flowers, trade having increased over 150 per cent during the past year.

Mr. Berno is slowly improving, but Lee is still confined to his bed. Josef Brumenschenkel reports business fairly good. He has 12,000 feet of glass all in lettuce, for which there is a good home market. At present he is getting 12½ cents per lb.

Oberlin, O.—On March 15th the greenhouses of Mr. V. C. Rice were badly damaged by fire, which started in the boiler room. Mr. Rice estimates the loss on buildings and contents at $2,000.

We are Headquarters for Water Lilies and Aquatic Plants of all kinds.

Intending planters will gain a long start and early blooms by procuring dormant tubers of the tender Nymphæas now and starting same indoors, thus securing strong plants for planting at proper season, and also save the expense of heavy express charges. We shall be pleased to furnish estimates and offer practical suggestions to those intending planting either large or small ponds.

AMONG THE GROWERS.

Sinner Bros., Chicago.

The stock in the establishment of Messrs. Sinner Bros. is in fine condition all through and they are right in it for Easter. They grow 2,800 Brides, 2,800 Maids, 2,800 Golden Gate and 2,000 Meteors, and the quality of the blooms has been good the entire season.

They have kept a record of the blooms cut from their carnations and below we print the record from Sept. 1, 1901, to March 1, 1902. They grade their flowers and all short stemmed and small flowers are classed as thirds.

Plants.	Variety.	Flowers Cut.
2,100	White Cloud	21,900	No. 1.	675	No. 3
2,100	Flora Hill	16,625	"	1,525	"
2,100	Triumph	16,075	"	300	"
2,100	Sport	19,950	"	425	"
925	Lawson	10,975	"	475	"
2,100	Crane	11,250	"	75	"
2,100	America	11,075	"	850	"

Next year they will grow 1,000 Norway, and will bench a total of 16,000 carnation plants. Their plants now stand from 28 to 40 inches above the soil and the stems are good and strong.

In roses they will next season grow 2,000 Meteors, 3,000 Maids, 3,000 Brides, 2,000 Golden Gates, 1,000 Ivory, 250 Liberty and 5,000 American Beauty.

They have just completed their new houses, building 15,800 square feet, using Garland iron gutters and continuous ventilation with four Evans' machines to each house. They will plant one house right after Easter. G. C. Anderson is foreman.

THE CANADIAN HORTICULTURAL ASSOCIATION.

The executive committee of the above met in Toronto on the 14th of March to discuss arrangements for the 1902 convention to be held in Hamilton. The date fixed on is Wednesday and Thursday, the 3d and 4th of September. This date is during the first week of the Toronto Industrial exhibition, so that those living at a distance will be able to obtain greatly reduced rates, and the fare from Toronto to Hamilton (40 miles) being a very small item.

The Hamilton Horticultural Society will hold a horticultural fete and exhibition during the convention and invite the trade to make a special feature of the trade exhibits this year; there will be plenty of room in the hall they have secured.

As the Hamilton convention looms up it looks as if it would be the largest and best "that has been." E.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Will send you a full report of Easter trade conditions next week. The sales and orders up to date are away ahead of last year. Carnations are good, but are not nearly plentiful enough to fill the demand. Roses are a fair cut, but the demand as yet is not very brisk. Beauties are fairly plentiful and sell out readily. Lilies are in great demand; the stock of these around here is good and the blooms of fine quality. Violets plenty, quality good, demand fair. Weather clear and warm. Ribes.

Please favor us with a report of the Easter trade in your city, mailing same on Monday and oblige.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Plant Registration.

Messrs. Schmidt & Botley, Springfield, Ohio, who registered new rose "America" on November 30th, 1901, advise the secretary's office that they have learned that an old rose, introduced many years ago under the name America, is still in existence and catalogued by some dealers. They ask, therefore, to have the registration entry changed from America to "Young America," by which name their new rose will hereafter be known. It is described as a hybrid tea, the result of Duke of Edinburgh x Meteor. Buds large, pointed; flowers large, double, fragrant; color deep scarlet crimson; foliage large, dark, leathery.

This voluntary action on the part of Messrs. Schmidt & Botley, after they had gone to considerable expense in cataloguing and advertising their new rose under the name first given should, and doubtless will, secure for them the commendation and gratitude of the entire trade.

A. L. Thorne, Flushing, N. Y., registers carnation "White Layde" (Flora Hill x Mrs. Bradt); color clear ivory white; size three and one-quarter inches and over; stems long and stiff; calyx does not split; steady bloomer.

William J. Stewart, Secretary.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

A delightful rain has fallen at last, and all nature is blooming like Eden; peach, apricot and all early-blooming trees are one solid mass of bloom, the wild flowers are in evidence, and the glad springtime is on in full dress, and every one thinks life worth living in Texas.

The florists are all busy; trade has been unusually brisk for this time of the year, and all report good sales. The Haskell Avenue Floral Co.'s houses are one solid mass of bloom. They have as fine carnations as you will find anywhere. They grow F. Hill, Glacier and White Cloud for white; Scott, Lawson, E. Craig for pink; Crane and Chicago for red. These sorts do grandly in this clime. They have some dozen or more of the newer sorts on trial, some of which will be grown largely another season. A finer lot of Easter lilies, hyacinths, violets, azaleas, cyclamen and general assortment of Easter stock is hard to find under one lot of glass.

This firm is having a heavy mailing trade in small roses and the general class of catalogue plants, and several hands are kept busy in this line. Mr. Miller has just purchased a valuable property on Main street and let the contract for a fine brick building, which he will have completed in a few months. He intends to fit up one of the finest cut flower stores in the South.

Lone Star.

The wholesale price list of seeds, bulbs and supplies for florists, spring of 1902, issued by W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, covers a very comprehensive list of trade supplies and should be in the possession of every florist. Their general retail catalogue for 1902 is also an advance on previous issues, larger, well printed, freely illustrated, and listing a very large number of items. Any one wishing these catalogues can no doubt obtain them on application to the firm as above noted.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

After Easter.

A wonderful change comes over our houses as soon as Easter is over, not so much with the exclusive rose and carnation man as with the Easter plant grower, for now his houses are emptied, or should be, of his lilies, azaleas, acacias, rhododendrons, pot roses, genistas and spiraea and many other plants that have filled his benches for months, made his houses beautiful to look at and produced dreams wherein the dollar was floating all around.

You soon get straightened out. Your left-overs compactly occupying but a small space, I hope, and a large expanse of good bench room with the pleasant occupation of shifting, potting and spreading out your spring bedding and decorative stock. It is to the plant man a great advantage when Easter is as early in the season as that just passed, because there is plenty of time to shift again on before selling time our most important crops.

Geraniums.

The zonal geranium is decidedly with us the most important bedding plant. There is nothing new to be said about them, but get them shifted into the selling pot at once. Most of ours are the fall struck plants, are now in 3-inch pots, have been pinched and need no more "stopping." A 4-inch pot is the largest pot you can afford to give a bedding geranium, even if you do get the decent price of $1.50 per dozen. Don't use a rich soil with either much old manure or leaf mould; a rather heavy, fresh loam with a fifth or sixth of well rotted manure will do, and if you are minus the right kind of manure then add to the loam a 5-inch pot of bone flour to one ordinary wheelbarrow load of soil. I have many times impressed on my readers the value of potting firmly. Don't put the ball down in the bottom of the new pot and pile some soil on top and begin thumbing, for that is no way to get the soil firmly and evenly around the old ball. Hold the plant up till you get the earth well around the ball and then it goes down like a wedge. I can hear some say, "A geranium will grow however you handle it." It is a most accommodating plant, but there is a right and a wrong way to shift a plant, and this applies not only to geraniums but to all our greenhouse plants.

The zonal, by far the most important class of geraniums, we always keep inside on the lightest benches, plenty of ventilation, and if they are never shaded till selling time so much the better, and if you can afford time to plunge them in spent hops early in May you need never shade. The variegated and bronze, as well as the scented varieties, we put into a mild hotbed, but not till middle or end of April. Cuttings that were taken off the fall struck zonals about the first of February, are now nicely rooted in 2 and 2½-inch pots. They are liable to get stunted if they remain in those pots long during bright weather, so shift into 3 and 3½-inch pots as soon as possible.

Cannas.

Our next most important spring plant is the canna. Those we started a few weeks ago in flats or on the benches in an inch or two of sphagnum moss. They have made a growth of a few inches and sent out lots of roots. As soon as possible put them into pots, the strong growing kinds in 5-inch and the others in 4-inch. Cannas will enjoy the richest soil. The house should not go below 50 degrees at any time, but it should be light and bright. You want a canna to be stout and sturdy and then it will not feel the sun and wind. But you too often, when buying, get warm grown, drawn-up stuff that is miserable to look at till the new growth starts.

Buy a few of the best cannas for planting out for your stock. Tarrytown I consider unequaled as a grand scarlet; Pierson's Premier, a grand dwarf variety of the Queen Charlotte type, but much better; Mrs. Kate Gray, a very tall variety with immense orange flowers and luxurious tropical foliage; Buttercup is a beautiful pure yellow; McKinley, a fine medium height scarlet; Black Beauty is in a class by itself as a dwarf foliaged sort. The dwarf Florence Vaughan, as well as the older type, is indispensable, and one of the greatest of all cannas is Victory, a wonderfully free and beautiful orange; David Harum, I think, is the best of its class, a fine bronze leaf with an orange-scarlet flower. There are many other fine varieties but they are better known.

Caladiums.

Caladium esculentum, as soon as you have room, should also be taken from the flats of sand and put into 5-inch pots. A light house is also necessary for these or you will get a soft, long leaf that will break to pieces the first wind that occurs after being planted out.

View in Store of Robert Crawford, Jr., Philadelphia, at Easter.

Tuberous Rooted Begonias.

We started them about two weeks ago in two inches of sand in flats. They soon start and if you are not ready to put them into 3 or 4-inch pots place the flats in the light and cool. I like to put these plants into a hotbed end of April, where the sash can be removed and the plants hardened off.

Bedding Plants.

It is not necessary to remind you that all the common bedding plants that need shifting should be attended to as soon as possible, but there is use for considerable judgment in not getting many of the cheaper plants too early. The great object is to get plants in a growing, thrifty condition just at the selling or bedding time. A geranium may not be hurt if rather stunted for root room for a few weeks, but many plants are, such as heliotrope, salvia, feverfew, coleus and others.

Spiraeas.

For some years we have forced a few hundred Spiræa Japonica for Memorial Day. They should be potted and brought into a cool house at once; they will come along easily by the right time. A good grower in Boston told me last week that spiræa did much better potted in the fall and kept in cold-frames than heeled in for the winter, and doubtless he is right, but they take up lots of room in 6-inch pots, even if it is a cold-frame. Speaking of spiræa, the new varieties that are now offered for sale are grand. We have a few dozen of a sort called Washington, and we have sent for Gladstone, although the roots cost about double what the old japonicas do, which is only a few cents. The plants sold at Easter for double, which was a clear gain of at least 50 cents a plant. Remember it when you order.

Acacias.

No sooner is Easter over than preparations are made for a year hence, a few of the important plants must be thought of at once. At Mr. Wm. Edgar's of Waverley, Mass., the other day, in a grand collection of Easter stuff I noticed many beautiful plants of Acacia armata (Mimosa paradoxa); it is a superior, aristocratic plant to any other yellow we have. They are not much use for forcing if imported in the fall, and if you want to grow any, import them this spring.

Hydrangeas.

We never believed in the hydrangea greatly as an Easter plant, but in some localities it goes, and young plants should be grown on as vigorously as you can. They should be shifted on from a 2½-inch to a 4-inch pot when well rooted and the top pinched out, so that you will get a good plant either for planting out or growing in pots.

Genistas.

Another plant that is under way for another year is the cytisus, alias genista. They should be good sized cuttings when you start them as they grow mostly in spring, fall and winter, and little in hot weather, every chance should be given them to grow now. If starved in 2-inch pots till you "get time" in June, you cannot get a good plant for next spring. I believe there is no division of opinion about one point of treatment of this pretty yellow flower. It should always be grown in pots; some keep it inside and some plunge it outside, and both are successful.

Crimson Ramblers.

As necessary to think of as any just now is the Crimson Rambler rose, which seemed to me sold quite as well as ever. No doubt if well managed, the plants lifted from the field in November will give fine results, and if you have them in your own field or garden you are much better off than buying them from a distance. But I still think the plants grown in pots during summer are much more easily handled and are sure to give you shapely, well flowered plants. Now is the time to begin operations on this style. You can buy from any reliable nurseryman good one-year-old plants now and pot them in 6, 7 or 8-inch pots, according to their size. Cut them back to within four or five inches of the roots, you only want five or six good breaks, and if you can get a growth of 4 or 5 feet from these you are assured of a splendid plant. I believe for the first two or three weeks that a cold-frame is the best place to start these dormant plants, or a cool, shaded house, but when they have once started and are making roots they should have the greenhouse till at least July or August—but of that later.

Hardy Plants.

In conclusion, don't forget that you should not waste a day in transplanting herbaceous plants, deciduous trees and shrubs the moment the ground is dry. But don't touch the evergreens till the middle of May. William Scott.

CARNATION NOTES.

Now that Easter has come and gone you will naturally be looking forward to the time for planting your young stock in the field. In some sections this can be done about the middle of April, but we here are fortunate if we get our plants in the field by the middle of May. There is no more excuse now for shifting the young plants that need it, as you can now get all the room you need. You are sure to have a bench or two that are not yielding what they should or perhaps badly off-crop. By the time you get them into shape again you will be cutting all the blooms you need from one-half of your plants. Throw them out and give your next year's stock a fair show. There are some varieties like Lawson, Crocker, White Cloud, Elma and a few more that make large plants, and these especially will be greatly benefited by the additional room.

If you have only a limited stock of some choice variety or a seedling of which you want to work up a big stock as soon as possible, it is not too late to root the cuttings. These plants will only be good for propagating purposes, though, as they will be too small at planting time to give a fair quantity of bloom next season, unless you put several plants together in the bench. We have often planted cuttings into the field right from the cutting bench and if they are well rooted and the weather is favorable they take hold quickly and suffer very little. You will find much more difficulty, however, at this time in rooting the cuttings than you did a month ago. The sun is getting strong now and during bright days the houses get quite warm and really too warm for the cuttings. By whitewashing the glass and damping down the walks and spraying the cuttings you can keep them in a comparatively fresh condition, but you must always be careful that you do not overdo it, either. That is where the trick comes in, to know just how far to go and when to stop. An experienced propagator can tell at a glance just what is wanted or what has been done that was wrong. Too much shade will make the cuttings soft and weakly. Too much water and especially on the foliage at night, will cause rust and cutting bench fungus, too much sun and a bad wilting will kill the cuttings and so it keeps the best of us guessing just what to do sometimes.

A good plan is to put a light shade of whitewash on the outside of the glass to keep some of the heat out on bright days and yet not heavy enough to make it dark underneath on cloudy days. In addition to this you should have a curtain of good heavy muslin so arranged that it can be drawn aside on cloudy days so as to let the cuttings have all the light there is. At this time you must be careful, too, to select only well matured cuttings, as they are the only kind that will not wilt badly and cause a large percentage of loss. A. F. J. Baur.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

Now that Easter is past there will be plenty of bench room and no excuse for crowding the young stock. The difference in quality of stock that has had ample room on the bench right along from that which has been crowded is easily seen. The stock that has been crowded shows the effects by having lost a percentage of the lower leaves, and every leaf lost is a detriment to the vigor of the plant; they usually also have a weakly appearance. Overcrowding also allows spiders to get in their work, as it is so difficult to dislodge them with the syringe.

The advantages derived by giving room for a free circulation of air among the leaves are many. The foliage dries out rapidly after being syringed and is consequently harder and healthier than if allowed to stand a long time wet. Mildew has less chance to attack and is much easier checked than would be the case with soft, spongy growth.

The soil in the pots by being exposed to the sunlight dries out quickly and keeps sweet longer than if hidden under a dense foliage.

I am often asked: When is a young rose plant at the right stage to repot? I consider the proper time to repot is just after the plant has completed a growth and begun to ripen it. This is easily discerned by seeing the bronze colored tips assuming a natural green color. The roots also begin to lose that soft whiteness and become a nut-brown color.

By studying the conditions and proper time for these operations the plant will gain in vigor, stockiness and uniformity, conditions which cannot be obtained by unseasonable repotting. Ribes.

LETTUCE TROUBLES.

J. W. N. has three houses of lettuce which are almost a failure. When half grown, plants wilt down and rot. Soil was changed last fall. Fumigated with brimstone twice. Asks if there is any remedy short of tearing down the houses and moving on to new ground.

The trouble is, of course, due to the "rot," as it is called. If J. W. N. will follow cultural notes as given in an earlier issue of this paper, he should be able to get rid of his troubles. Give abundant ventilation and keep the surface of the soil stirred up, and above all keep the leaves of the plants as dry as possible.

Soil will quickly become lettuce sick if the same soil is used continually, but if soil was new last fall, this does not apply to this case. Sterilized soil is used with great success by large growers as a preventive of rot and mildew. J. W. N. would find a layer of sterilized soil on his beds would serve the same purpose as new soil and there would be no need to change the houses over to new ground. Sterilizing can be done by using a box, say five feet square and three feet deep, with a coil of perforated steam pipes in the bottom, heating the soil up to 200 degrees. This will kill the germs of disease and lettuce planted in this soil makes a clean, healthy growth. Some growers claim that they would rather have an inch of sterilized soil on their beds than any kind of manure.

Fumigation with tobacco is necessary to keep down aphis, but so far as fumigating with brimstone is concerned I would say that the cure would be worse than the disease. Proper treatment of the plants as regards watering and ventilating will be found more efficacious than any patent remedies. Prevention is better than cure. Chas. H. Totty.

DUTCH HYACINTHS.

A sample of hyacinth buds, or, rather, undeveloped spikes not over two inches long, arrives from "J. J.," with a request that we explain the cause, if known.

Without passing this along to some one who may be able to speak with certainty about this trouble, I will merely say—and this may bring out expressions from others—that I don't know. It occurred on my place some seven or eight years ago. Not with every batch brought in, but with one lot of 200 during early March. It was particularly bad when the plants had been in the house about a week and the spike was some two inches long. They broke off at the base of the stem just as in the case of the samples sent, and on examining others they just lifted out, being entirely severed.

The treatment and the soil was not different that year from any other, and I would not say it was the fault of the bulbs. It is up to some one else. W. S.

CORRECTION.

In my notes on a visit to Mr. John Dunlop, Toronto, in speaking of his new range of five or six connecting houses, equal span, with gutters seven feet high and no partitions, I said: "They of course run north and south." That was a slip of the pen, for they of course run east and west. No one would think of building such a range other than east and west. W. S.

THE BLUE SALVIA.

(Salvia patens.)

The blue salvia does not seem to be so well known as the scarlet (Salvia splendens). Treated as an annual it does not give as good satisfaction as the flower deserves. In order to develop plants and blossoms seed should be sown early. The small plants must be potted as soon as large enough to handle and frequently shifted until the planting season arrives. The young plants are sensitive to moisture and care must be exercised to avoid overwatering in pots.

In all stages of growth, either in or out of doors, they require the full sun. Young plants should be planted in a moderately rich soil with free drainage in a sunny situation. In order to induce a bushy growth plants should be pinched back until flower spikes develop. Without pinching the plants make a straggling growth and produce weak and drooping flower spikes, while otherwise they develop into strong, bushy, well shaped plants.

The flowers, which are of an intense blue, known to the world of colors as cobalt blue, appear in July and continue through the months of July and August. These bright blue flowers coming at a season when the prevailing colors are of the yellow and scarlet shades make it very useful to use in bouquets in connection with white flowers. The beautiful color, long stems, and graceful spikes render it a very attractive color plant.

They are usually classed as annuals, but the plants develop fleshy roots, a fact not generally known, which can be wintered in a semi-dry condition, as cannas, in sand. In order to have very early flowers pot in fall, cut old flower stalks down and let them grow over winter. They will make good growth and begin flowering very early, thus giving better results than the first year. The growth of the blue salvia is entirely different from the red ones as they make growth and throw out flower spikes directly from fleshy roots and must be treated accordingly by cutting each disbloomed spike to allow it to develop a new one from the root. To attain their best growth and beauty they should not be crowded. These flowers are sure to attract attention wherever seen as their color is so entirely distinct from all other blue flowers. C. M. Hemala.

Joliet, Ill.—J. Ernest Jensen, for two and one-half years foreman for Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., has arrived to take a position as foreman and grower for the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co.

Columbus, O.—John Dreier has been appointed florist at city park vice J. B. Gibson, resigned.

THE EASTER TRADE.

In this issue we print numerous reports of the Easter trade, covering nearly every section of the country. Averaging these reports it would appear that as a whole the trade shows a distinct and satisfactory gain over last year, and that unfavorable weather in certain sections was all that prevented the gain from being larger and universal.

Sandusky, O.—The Central Greenhouses say Easter trade was 40 per cent better this year than last.

Carlisle, Pa.—Jesse Robbins reports Easter trade as greatly in excess of former years, especially in the line of flowering plants.

Texarkana, Ark.—M. S. Stegall says his Easter trade and prices were 50 per cent better than last year. Everything was cleaned up.

Oskaloosa, Ia.—The Kemble Floral Co. report Easter trade as about the same as last year, with supply and demand about equal.

Muncie, Ind.—The Muncie Floral Co. says Easter trade was about the same as last year. High prices on cut flowers cut down sales considerably.

New Brighton, Pa.—August Meyer reports Easter trade as 50 per cent larger than last year. He sold out of everything in blooming pot plants and cut flowers.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.—T. J. Totten reports Easter trade as good, plants leading in demand and not so much call for cut flowers as usual. Lilies in big demand. Everything cleaned up.

Dubuque, Ia.—W. A. Harkett reports Easter sales as a little ahead of last year with more demand for medium priced plants. Otherwise calls were much the same as in former years.

Worcester, Mass.—Fisher & Son report their Easter trade as far ahead of last year, potted stuff of all kinds going well. Violets and valley had the preference for corsage wear.

Oshkosh, Wis.—M. A. Miles reports Easter sales of cut flowers and plants as good. Prices ruled about the same as last year. Plenty to supply the demand. Weather was fine; could not have been better.

Pekin, Ill.—Geo. A. Kuhl says Easter trade was better than ever, and if lilies had not been a partial failure the total would have been still larger. The lily question should be discussed more in future.

Galion, O.—Chas. J. Tracht reports Easter sales as double those of last year. Sold out clean. We had perfect weather, warm and sun shining all day, which brought out the people and put them in the humor to buy.

Muscatine, Ia.—J. E. Kranz reports that he had a very large supply of Easter flowers, which were almost entirely sold by Saturday night, while the rest went Sunday morning. The weather was good and everything went fast.

Owensboro, Ky.—C. G. Nanz reports Easter trade as 50 per cent larger than last year. All cut flowers sold freely. Good call for blooming plants, ferns and palms. Good sized callas were in especially good demand. Received fair prices for everything and am well pleased.

Quincy, Ill.—Gentemann Bros. say Easter trade was 20 per cent better than last year. Everything sold at sight. There was a greater demand for bulbous stock and cut flowers than any previous year. They sold out clean.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Cousins & Hall report Easter business as about 25 per cent ahead of last year. Saturday was such a beautiful day it brought the people out and all kinds of cut flowers and flowering plants sold well at fair prices.

Marietta, O.—Local florists report Easter trade as better than any previous year. At Smith's everything was sold by Sunday morning and customers had to be turned away. A heavy thunder storm passed over this town Sunday morning.

Concord, N. H.—The Wm. S. Wilson Floral Co. report Easter trade in this city as probably 20 to 25 per cent ahead of last year. Everything was well cleaned out. Lilies were scarce, not nearly enough to go around. Everyone is well satisfied.

Eau Claire, Wis.—O. R. Demmler reports Easter trade the same as ever. His lilies, of which he had only longiflorums and not one diseased plant in the whole lot, were all sold by Easter noon. Also carnations and roses, some blooming plants and bulbous stuff.

Peoria, Ill.—Peoria never before had such an Easter. The weather was perfect, not even dust. Stock of all kinds sold well, with prices higher. Lilies were at a premium. The Japan gave best satisfaction. All the florists were short on lilies and could not supply the demand.

Bridgeport, Conn.—Jas. Horan & Son report trade for Easter fine. Although stormy Saturday trade kept up. Lilies, azaleas and hyacinths sold well. In cut flowers, violets, roses and carnations were cleaned out. The trade was 40 per cent better than last year. They had hardly anything left.

Atchison, Kas.—The Mangelsdorf Bros. Co. report that Easter trade showed an increase of 25 per cent over last year. Well grown blooming plants were in great demand, lilies leading. Supply of lilies not equal to demand. In cut flowers carnations led, white being most generally used.

Little Rock, Ark.—D. M. Tipton says Easter trade was probably about the same as last year. Perhaps a little more money was received for the same amount of goods, except in carnations, which were a heavy loss on account of the high price charged and the sleepy condition in which they were received. Lilies were most in demand, with azaleas next. Any good plant with a nice bloom would sell.

Elmira, N. Y.—H. N. Hoffman reports a notable increase in the call for blooming plants at Easter and that sales will show an increase of 20 per cent in that line, with prices fully up to the average. The call for cut flowers was about as usual, with prices strong. Violets and carnations were in special demand.

Bay City, Mich.—Bochringer Bros. say Easter trade was considerably ahead of any previous year. The weather was fine all the week except Friday. A large stock of lilies, azaleas, cinerarias, spiræas and bulbous plants was completely sold out at somewhat better prices than last year. Lilies were rather short, being on the average 22 to 24 inches high.

Liberty, Mo.—Paul Stark reports Easter trade as the best he ever had since locating here, and if he had had the kind of weather Friend Scott hoped for it would have been out of sight. He had to pick every bud that showed color of carnations, roses and violets. Bulbs not much wanted. Saturday was very disagreeable. Spring plant trade promises to be good.

Hamilton, O.—Theo. Bock says Easter trade was first class and all that could be handled and at fair prices. Lilies, callas and carnations were sold out clean. Roses, tulips, daffodils, hyacinths in flats and azaleas sold well. Not much call for violets, as the day was very stormy, and what were sold were for churches and homes and less for personal use or wear.

Lansing, Mich.—R. Mann says Easter brought high winds and rain which continued all day and as a result trade was not quite up to former years. Lilies were scarce and most of the plants were shipped in. Other flowers were in fair supply. A number of the dry goods stores had fine displays Friday and Saturday. The churches have not done much in the way of decorating for the past few years.

Springfield, Mass.—Mark Aitkin says it is rather early to give a correct report of the Easter trade but he thinks that all the florists did as large a trade as last year. Speaking for himself he went far ahead of last year. People seemed more inclined to buy better and larger. His plant trade exceeded that of last year by a large amount, but there was no material increase in the cut flower end of the business.

Janesville, Wis.—Rentschler Bros. say Easter trade was fully 25 per cent better than any previous year. In plants first call was for lilies and azaleas; then cinerarias, spiraeas, hyacinths, daffodils and Boston ferns. They had a 4x24-ft. bench of Lady Campbell violets in a carnation house from which they picked 1,500 violets for Easter and sold them at 40 cents a bunch, or $1.60 per hundred. Taken altogether trade was very satisfactory.

Newburyport, Mass.—J. A. Keniston reports that he has not seen the other florists, but judging from what he has seen in the windows of private residences, and from his church, which was never before so freely decorated, and from the stores, he thinks Easter must have been much more generally observed than usual. All kinds of stores were decorated more or less with plants and flowers. Even the negro bootblacks made their little display.

Anderson, Ind.—Stuart & Haugh report that for a few days before Easter the weather was fine, causing blooming plants and cut flowers to develop nicely. While potted plants sold well, carnations took the lead, prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 per dozen. There was not a big demand for bulbous stock. Easter lilies sold well, though higher in price than last year. Business was fully one-third larger than last year. Nearly everything was cleaned up, though Sunday was a blustery day.

Lincoln, Neb.—Chapin Bros. report Easter trade as the best they ever had by a good deal. Everything sold and it was a plant Easter, as cut flower orders did not begin to come in till about Friday. The weather was all one could ask and as plants needed no wrapping were out in time and in good shape. Lilies led and then anything nice in bloom. Stock was more plentiful and better than usual and sold up clean. Have not seen the other boys but presume things were the same with them.

Lowell, Mass.—Patten & Roberts report that Easter trade was good considering the difficulties to contend with. Twenty thousand mill operatives threatened to strike during Easter week, and the weather on Friday and Saturday was stormy. Lilies sold well and the supply ran out early Saturday afternoon. The price obtained was 20 cents per flower. Roses and carnations were not in much demand. Violets sold well. Bulbous stock, both cut and in pans, sold well, especially daffodils in pans. Crimson Ramblers were something new here at Easter, so was the Porto Rican matting, which certainly greatly enhances the attractiveness of the plants that are dressed with it.

Dallas, Tex.—The Haskell Avenue Floral Co. report Easter trade as far surpassing any previous Easter. All the general stores decorated freely with plants and flowers, and everything available in cut flowers and plants sold quickly. Everything was cleaned up before closing time, though stocks were large. All the churches decorated and some of the efforts were a credit to the artists. Sunday morning was bright and pleasant, though a little chilly, and the streets were thronged. All nature is in bloom here now.

Pontiac, Ill.—W. J. Miller says his Easter trade was fully 50 per cent larger than last year and broke all records with him. Had plenty of all kinds of cut flowers and blooming plants but was short of lilies. Prices were about 10 per cent higher than last year. Taken all together it was a very satisfactory Easter. His trade all winter has been much better than preceding seasons. His stock has been much higher grade than heretofore, which goes to show that quality is what counts in increasing trade, even when better prices are asked.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Miss Flick says the bright warm sunshine of last Saturday brought the florists lots of business. She did nearly twice the business of last Easter. Lilies were scarce, but people like novelties and everything in that line in the way of baskets and blooming plants brought good prices. Window boxes filled with lilies, hyacinths and tulips brought fancy prices. She had a fine lot of Crimson Ramblers, hydrangeas and hardy shrubs for which she was indebted to the skill of Mr. Aug. Wonderlan, her grower. The demand for cut flowers was good. Carnations sold well at $1.00 to $2.00 per doz. The Clara Belle is always in demand here at fancy prices. Roses brought $1.50 to $3.00 per doz.; violets 50 cents. Taking everything into consideration the Easter trade was very satisfactory.

Aurora, Ill.—Jos. Smely says Easter trade was good, showing an increase of 15 per cent. over last year. Prices were about the same as last year or a little higher. Lilies were short of demand and sold out clean. Carnations and roses were also a little short. Bulbous stuff never moved with greater difficulty and plenty of it remains unsold. Sweet peas sold well. In plants cinerarias and spiraeas sold very slowly and were left over. More palms and ferns were sold than at any other Easter, mostly to new customers, who wished to buy something that would keep.

Sharon, Pa.—M. E. O'Brien says Easter trade in Sharon was a record breaker and prices were fully 25 per cent higher than a year ago in cut flowers. Carnations had the call and with a short crop ordinary grades brought $1 a dozen. In roses, Brides and Maids brought $3, Perles, $2.50. Tulips in 6-inch pans brought 75 cents to $1 each. Cinerarias in 6-inch pots 50 to 75 cents each; Azaleas in 6-inch pots, $2 to $5 each. Harrisii and longiflorum in pots, 25 cents per flower and bud. In fact everything that had a flower was sold out clean, which is an evident proof of the close relationship between the florist business and prosperity.

Marion, Ind.—Gunnar Teilmann reports Easter trade as decidedly better than last year and it would have been still better had Easter Sunday been a nice bright day instead of stormy and disagreeable. Plant trade during the week was excellent and away ahead of previous years, hyacinths, azaleas, Crimson Ramblers and hydrangeas selling particularly well. Of lilies there were not enough to go around, though all the local growers had a good percentage in bloom. There were more lilies sold than ever before. All the churches were decorated more or less, which took lots of palms, blooming plants and cut flowers and kept all the florists busy.

Batavia, Ill.—McAllister & Co. say: "The bright weather the fore part of the week brought out the people and trade was very brisk. Friday's rain acted as a check, but Saturday's bright sky brought customers with a rush. The demand far exceeded the supply and the call was principally for good stock. Carnations were at a premium, and every flower of fair quality was quickly snapped up. Lilies sold rapidly and prices remained high. Our roses, which have never been off crop since last October, sold to the very last of the cut. Geraniums and all potted plants sold quickly, and the coming season promises to be a record breaker for all kinds of outdoor stock."

Des Moines, Ia.—J. T. D. F. says Easter trade was about 25 per cent larger than last year, with prices ranging from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen for roses, and 75 cents to $1.50 for carnations. Some report plants as selling better than cut flowers, others the reverse because they did not have the plants. W. L. Morris made up some very handsome baskets of plants that went at $5 to $10 each. This is not a flower-buying public, and while some are trying to build up a creditable trade others are pulling back and discouraging the public by decorating churches for Easter with plants in pots that have not been washed since Noah used them. Please do not swear, Mr. Scott.

St. Joseph, Mo.—L. J. Stuppy says Easter business showed a good increase over last year, the plant trade expanding and cut flowers holding their own. Some nicely arranged baskets and fine azaleas brought fancy prices, as did the better carnations. Bulb stock was cleaned out entirely, mostly in pans, little being saved for cut flowers, this demand being supplied mostly with roses, carnations and violets, the latter being short in supply. Very few customers were turned away and nothing was left unsold. Porto Rican mats easily led the way in pot coverings. Plenty of good lilies and more bad ones under the bench.

Fond du Lac, Wis.—E. Haentze says favorable weather during Easter week not only resulted in large sales of plants and flowers, but brought out the Harrisii lilies in fine shape. The demand for the lily keeps growing, and is far ahead of that for the finest azaleas, rhododendrons or any fancier stock. Azaleas at above $1 will stick while lilies at $1.50 go fast. Bulbous stock in pots or pans goes slow, unless sold at Milwaukee prices. Good hybrid roses in bloom, if not over $1.00, go fast. White stocks, large plants full of bloom, also Empératrice Elizabeth stocks, meet with ready sale. He thinks the last named will take a place among the cheaper grade of Easter plants. In cut flowers nothing sells better than good carnations if not over 75 cents a doz. Roses next at $1.50 a doz. Violets sell rapidly at 25 cents a bunch. Tulips, hyacinths, daffodils and valley were in less demand than in former years. The demand for cut flowers, and carnations especially, was larger and the sale of medium priced Easter plants double that of former years. But high prices decrease trade rather than increase it.

PHILADELPHIA.

Easter.

The business done at Easter was enormous, aided by a week of balmy, spring-like weather which brought out immense crowds to the streets. Plants were in brisk demand, the regular stores disposing of great numbers. Quite a number of shops were opened just for Easter; these were not so successful as their established rivals. Azaleas were prime favorites; one firm who flowered between six and seven thousand had not a single plant left. Lilies were in short supply due to the disease; more good plants and good cut blooms could have been sold. Hydrangeas and rhododendrons were in demand, no good plant being left. Genistas, deutzias, spiræas and lilacs all went well. Japanese cherries proved poor keepers. Bulbous stock was the weakest feature of the list; immense quantities were sold, but there were too many grown.

An excellent business was done in cut flowers, fully equal, and in some cases superior, to that of last year. Long stemmed American Beauties were surprisingly plentiful and there were almost too many of them; $6 per doz. was the top price. Tea roses were eagerly sought, Brides being especially scarce. Good stock brought $12 to $15 per 100 and even more. Carnations, always very high at Easter, averaged a little lower in price than usual; still they brought pretty good figures, on ordinary grade, $3 to $4 per 100; fancies, $5, $6, $8 and a few $10. Violets sold well, doubles bringing from 50 cents to $1 per 100. One firm disposed of a hundred and fifty thousand. Valley was another good seller; $2, $3, $4 and a few $5 per 100 were the figures. Calla lilies were not very popular. Single daffodils arrived in large quantities from the south towards the end of the week; they were on the street at 12 cents per doz.

Carnations.

The carnation market was badly spoiled by holding back the flowers too long. The growers finding the demand light toward the end of Lent shipped few or no flowers from the 20th to the 25th of March, then dumped a lot of poor trash on the market that nobody wanted. Many orders booked at good prices between these dates had to be canceled for want of stock. The flowers that ought to have filled them went to the ash barrel and the fakir. A grower once caught in this way should never be caught again.

Notes.

Robert Scott & Son will build two new houses this summer for roses. The single span house with one bench and a walk, erected over the ends of the other houses, has given satisfaction economizing heat and giving a covered way that prevents depreciation in value of cut blooms on the way to the cooling room.

Lilies at 12 to 15 cents were good stock this year, if you did lose too many bulbs—it is a pretty big "if" though. There was little time wasted in sleeping toward the end of last week.

Wm. C. Smith reappeared as a florist, renting the shop at 1227 Chestnut street for last week.

Charles Thomas rented a shop close to Pennock Bros. for the week.

The Florists' Club met on Tuesday evening. H. E. Ford gave further information about pipe. The Conard & Jones Co. exhibited a sport from Crimson Rambler believed to be an improvement on the older variety.

Wilmington.

The country near Wilmington, Delaware, is rapidly developing into a great carnation growing district. The bulk of the product comes to the Philadelphia market. There are evidences of prosperity on all sides that lead to the belief that this section will soon equal Chester county in the fame of its carnations.

William H. Potter is a hustling grower who has sent some fine carnations to this city during the winter. Crane is grown for red, McGowan and Hill are the whites. He also grows some Easter stuff for the local market and for later will have some spring plants. He works a large farm in addition to his florist business.

William H. Vance has a thrifty looking lot of carnations that reflect credit upon their owner and his foreman, Herman Wolf. A great number of varieties are grown and nearly all are evidently paying well. The young stock is gotten up in pots in excellent shape; it will then be planted in flats till the set-out in the field. Those intended for summer blooming are in 3-inch and will be shifted into 4-inch before being planted out in about a month. Mrs. Fisher is grown for white and William Scott for pink for this purpose; a few Ethel Crocker will be tried also. This latter variety, unsatisfactory as a forcing sort in cold weather, will, it is hoped, be a good thing for summer flowers. Mrs. Lippincott had been tried and will be grown more largely; Joost does well. Hybridizing is giving some interesting results. A very even lot of lilies were flowered for the local market at Easter; also some bulbous stock. These will be followed by pot roses and then chrysanthemums. The young carnations, nearly 100,000 in number, will be followed by asters. This place will be moved this summer to a new piece of ground nearby and another house added.

Simon Brothers have a fine, large farm formerly devoted entirely to growing truck, some of the glass having been put up for forcing vegetables. Charles Simon has in the past five years branched out as a very successful carnation grower. The firm has probably the largest plant near Wilmington and they are now erecting, at some distance from the present establishment, two houses 175x20 feet each and one house 220x16 feet to be operated by Mr. Simon's son. Their carnations are in fine shape. Joost has given splendid results; Maceo is well liked; Hill seems the best white; Lorna looked well. A store was taken for the week before Easter and an immense quantity of stock, chiefly lilies, tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, daisies, geraniums and begonias, were grown to sell through this medium. Large plants are not grown, the demand being for small plants of moderate price. A small house of calla lilies was in good shape, with a fair crop in sight. It is proposed to replace a flat roofed vegetable house with an even span peaked roof this summer. Soft coal is used for fuel.

L. E. Bayliss is the oldest florist in Wilmington. He carried his stock to Philadelphia and sold it there twenty-seven years ago. About this time Wm. K. Harris was first starting in the business. Carnations are the principal crop and they look well. Mrs. Bradt is seen in three colors, the usual variegated, a red and a white; all fine flowers. A very nice lot of Dutch hyacinths were flowered for Easter. There is evidence that the proprietor is a thoroughly efficient grower.

H. M. Paschall has four good houses filled with carnations in sight and mushrooms out of sight—in two senses: they are under the carnation benches and they are very well done. The carnations are very fine, producing a great Easter crop. They reflect credit on the owners, who withdrew from the shipping business four years ago to embark in that of greenhouse cultivation. Besides the varieties noted elsewhere, Cartledge looked well. This variety is believed to be a good one up to New Years. The young stock is all grown in soil for economy in room and is not potted as at most of the other places. This plan has been pursued successfully with the parent stock.

The genial Robert Lockerbie has a large place devoted to roses, carnations, sweet peas, rubbers and a general variety of stock. His best flowers come to this market. His many friends will be interested to know that the lease on his present place expires June 1, when he will remove to Claymont, Delaware, there to continue in his calling. The general method of growing carnations at all the places was in raised benches. The general method of staking was by wires run lengthwise, usually three with strings across. The varieties were very numerous, generally the most up-to-date sorts of proven merit; white and the various shades of pink predominated; scarlet and fancies were grown to some extent; hardly any crimson or yellow. Scott is popular, though low in price. It produces many more blooms than any other sort. Practically the entire product of this district is handled by one cut flower merchant, Leo Niessen, who has done much to develop the carnation industry here and raise it to its present high standard. CHICAGO.

Easter.

It was a good Easter, and but for unfavorable weather at a critical time it would undoubtedly have been far better. As predicted in our notes last week the supply was larger than generally anticipated. Even lilies showed up in considerable quantities at the last.

The wholesalers all report business as all that could be expected, and on the average there was probably a comfortable increase over last year. There was enough stock of all kinds to meet all demands, with the exception of good shipping grade Meteors and Perles. Of bulbous stock, especially tulips, there was more than enough. Lily of the valley did not move nearly as well as last year.

The lily situation was peculiar. A serious shortage seemed a certainty, but some remarkably large lots appeared in the market when it was rather late to place them and many had been frightened from stocking up by the high price and uncertainty as to securing the goods. As a result the lily market weakened when it was expected to be strongest, and we hear of sales being made at one time as low as $10.00 a hundred. Of course the bulk of the cut was placed at better figures, but it shows what will happen when the men who sell the stock lose their reckoning through lack of information as to the actual supply.

The warm period preceding Easter, while it brought out an excellent supply as to quantity in most lines, had a bad effect on stock that was being held back and some woeful examples of overpickling were seen. It was especially noticeable in the carnations. Lots of them were cleaned up at $1 a hundred, when they would have brought $2 or $3 had they been sent to market in their prime.

On good shipping grade stock of all kinds prices were very well maintained and on the whole it was a very satisfactory Easter week.

The local retailers had troubles of their own. On Friday it rained all day and trade was way below what it should be. Saturday broke all records, but Sunday morning brought with it a high gusty wind and quite a heavy fall of wet snow. As a result Sunday sales were light and with few exceptions they carried over very considerable stocks of cut flowers.

In total volume the retail trade probably equaled or slightly exceeded that of last year, but was not up to expectations. The heaviest call was for plants in pretty arrangements and a large quantity of them was sold. Pretty combinations and fine specimen blooming plants in pot covers sold best. Crimson Ramblers did not seem to go so well as last year.

At Samuelson's a combination basket of plants ranging in price from $5 to $10 seemed to lead, and one extra good seller was a pan of hyacinths in a "crow's nest" basket with a stuffed chick set in one side. The central feature of his window display was a huge broken egg of cape flowers, in and out of which ran a brood of live chicks.

At Smyth's the heavy call was for plants and plant arrangements. Among the plants that moved slowly here were lilacs. His window contained a huge nest made of green moss in which were numerous Easter eggs and small cotton chicks.

Cut lilies were quite plentiful in some of the stores on Monday and it was evident that demand had not been up to anticipations. Some of the store men say that the people didn't even ask for lilies, had evidently made up their minds for something else, and this is attributed to the large amount of talk in the daily press about the scarcity of lilies, the high prices the florist would have to ask, etc. It certainly must have had some effect.

The Market at Date.

There is an excellent supply of all kinds of stock in the market now and the buyer can easily get what he wants. Demand is fair, but could be better. There is a fine lot of long Beauties coming in. It is a long time since we have seen as many fine long Beauties on hand as on Tuesday. On the whole the market is in very good condition for the week after an important holiday. Since Easter the weather has been cold and rather gloomy, which may soon check the cut some if it continues.

Various Items.

Several of the retailers said that a larger proportion of their customers than usual were out of the city Easter week.

Double tulips seemed to find buyers quicker than single ones.

Some shipments to the south were badly delayed by washouts on the railroads, and flowers that arrived Saturday night were of no use for Saturday sales.

The local retailers have bought little since Easter, indicating left over stocks from the holiday.

E. Asmus & Co. have issued an announcement of the opening of their retail establishment at 1860-1870 Evanston avenue, near Wilson avenue.

Hauswirth went into plants as largely as he could with his facilities, and used blooming geraniums rather freely. The people took to them, too.

Friedman was strong in large azaleas, acacias, lilacs, Ramblers and Japanese cherries. The latter went well, he says.

Wienhoeber did a large business, probably ahead of last year, but had made much greater preparation in the way of plants, and could have filled more orders for them. A pretty plant arrangement had the call.

The Florists' Club entertainment and ball will be held next Tuesday evening in the Masonic Temple Drill Hall. The entertainment will begin at 8 o'clock. Some first-class talent has been secured and it promises to be very enjoyable. The ball will follow the entertainment. The next regular meeting of the club, the date for which falls on the evening following the entertainment, will be omitted.

The Easter display at Lincoln Park was very fine this year. Especially notable was a grand lot of cinerarias, which we were told was from Dreer's strain of seed.

Bowling.

The team entered in the Spring League played their second series on March 25th, winning one of the games, against the Grands.

Easter Week.

Bret Harte says: "For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, the heathen Chinee is peculiar." The average Bay State flower grower is in the same category. I have had a finger in the floral pie of Boston for a quarter of a hundred Christmas, Easter and memorial holidays, and these growers have followed the "dark way" of hoarding up their stock too hard for each and every one of them. I think, in endeavoring to perform the 'vain trick'' of executing a double price upon the holiday. Mind you, they are not to be blamed for doing it if it could be done, because the irregular buyers are not slow in mention of low prices at other times. But this Easter was in line with all other holidays. Growers refused to sell at fair prices during the first part of the week, and there was a bit of a lull on Friday and very near a "slump" on Saturday. However, had we had fair weather upon Saturday another song might have been piped. A good trade was carried on everywhere and better weather would have made traffic unprecedented. Goods were not held back enough to affect their quality so much as formerly, after all, and as all kinds of plants were in most excellent shape the quality of goods remaining unsold is quite good.

There were good lilies enough to go around and a few to spare in spite of all the scare talk, and an item in connection therewith is to the effect that Lewis of Marlboro loaded 1,100 blossoms of them upon a freight-car for Boston and by some mistake a terrific current of steam heat was put upon the car, the whole business perished, and more diplomacy with express companies is in the air.

Mr. F. W. Clark, the "hospital man," tells interesting facts concerning Easter Sunday taken from his pocket weather record for the past fifteen years. This gives eleven fair Easters and four rainy ones; but his report fails to designate how many of the fair ones were spoiled for floral use by rainy days just preceding as in the present case.

J. S. Manter.

NEW YORK.

Easter.

The weather! Fickle jade! She came to town early in the week all smiles and hope; she "looked on the bright side of things" until Friday, and when the display in every store was perfect and all was in readiness for the expected crowds of buyers, she couldn't stand the pressure any longer, and wept. How it rained Friday! Plants on the outside suffered, customers materialized slowly, things looked gloomy. But "the unexpected always happens." Saturday was all smiles the birds sang and the air was like a breath of springtime. There wasn't much left to sell anywhere by the time Easter dawned, and such an Easter! Never brighter skies or balmier air. Never such crowds on the great avenue. Nearly everyone wore flowers and most of the flowers were violets; hardly a rose, now and then an orchid, here and there a spray of lily of the valley, but nearly always violets.

Everything needed was abundant. Wholesale cut flower men, realizing the voice of public demand, became themselves plantsmen, and many of them kept samples in their windows and sold them for the growers. Sunday's windows everywhere attested the general cleaning out of stock. Some of the leading establishments had not enough left over to look "respectable." If anything remained it was an over-grown genista or azalea or bougainvillea, and there were few of them. Everybody ought to be happy. The growers have nothing left, the wholesalers are rejoicing with empty ice boxes, the retailers have nothing to sell.

Prices asked were generally most fair and reasonable. The only "kickers" must be those who patronized the department stores and bought the withered, drooping, worthless apologies for plants to be found in the majority of these "hotbeds of imposition" and these deserved just what they got and what everyone deserves who wanders into illegitimate fields. Lilies were none too plentiful; the best were well worth 15 cents and the absence of the Bermuda competition enabled them to advance in price and value as Easter approached; they have not been as popular for many years. A good many flowering plants were disposed of at auction at the sales of the past week at Elliott's and Cleary's. The supply of nursery stock offered by this system grows yearly. It is remarkable how well prices are maintained for good stock at these sales.

The window displays on Broadway and Fifth avenue this Easter were great, and in fact, on all the avenues of N. Y. itself and at the leading stores in Brooklyn, the care in arrangement and beauty of effect has never been excelled. Stumpp's at the park entrance near 59th street and Fifth avenue, was very striking. The novelties were a pair of tricolored azaleas of immense size selected by Mr. Stumpp last summer near Nice, France, and purchased at a high price from a family where they were an "heirloom," having been grafted by the grandfather of their owner. You wouldn't believe it if I were to tell you how many hundred dollars Mr. Stumpp received for them. They were beauties. Between them was the largest bougainvillea I ever saw. The immense store and basement were crowded with as fine a collection of perfect plants as could possibly be got together.

Thorley's novelty was his sedan chairs in all sizes and the effect, when filled with flowers according to their capacity, was charming indeed. As usual, his "branches" and his "overflow" stores were crowded and then depleted. Crimson Ramblers were here and everywhere in evidence. This certainly was the most popular plant of the season; short-lived, rapidly fading, hard to keep fresh and beautiful, its brilliancy appealed to the uninitiated and it sold without recommendation.

Dards had nothing left Sunday; his stock was superb. A load of Crimson Ramblers worth from $5 to $25 each left outside for display Saturday morning was gone in an hour. The new store of this firm will be occupied by Mr. Dards May 1. It will be "one of the finest." Siebrecht reports a tremendous Easter as usual. All the standard Easter plants were abundant; a novelty, tree snowballs sold rapidly. The Rosary had a wonderful display; specimens of azaleas unrivaled in size and perfection, Begonia View in George Craig's, Philadelphia, at Easter.

Gloire de Lorraine, gardenias in pots, double flowering cherry and a fine supply of the new azalea, "Haerensiana," crowded the store to the doors and the sidewalk also, where Japanese maples abounded.

To refer to every store would savor of repetition. McConnell's branch was a gorgeous sight. Never had he such an Easter; his pockets were bulging with orders and "green goods" and his face indicated a return to the good health he deserves. Warendorff's birdnests, Easter egg baskets and greenhouse boxes were decided novelties. Wadley & Smythe sold out completely Sunday. Baskets of moss roses were one of their prettiest window effects, while great mounds of lilies and Crimson Ramblers within made their handsome store exceedingly attractive. Mr. Robert Macmillan, one of our most popular gardeners east, is now in charge of their landscape department. At Small's banks of lilies reached to the ceiling and completely filled one of the immense windows. All through them were electric lights. The other window and the side walls were a mass of color. Curtains of asparagus and electricity completed the picture.

Notes.

The Florists' Club's monthly meeting next Monday promises much of interest. Trade exhibit decisions will be made; S. A. F. matters will be considered, and progress concerning the fall exhibition will be reported. The trip to Asheville begins to "simmer" in the minds of many. The best route is an important factor; the desire for a chartered boat, which the Clyde line would be glad to supply, has been expressed by many.

The bowlers are showing remarkable skill of late. Flatbush, too, is winning laurels outside of the trade.

The usual opportunity to growers of placing their stock around Union Square the Saturday before Easter, for sale to the public, was taken advantage of this year by a host of Jerseymen, who before noon had sold out at good prices.

Easter Trade.

Easter trade was fully up to the expectations of nearly all florists. All of the past week the weather was favorable to the buyers of plants. Most of the orders for cut flowers came in Saturday, which, of course, was a busy day, many being compelled to remain at their stores from early Saturday morning until late Sunday evening, and of course the usual batch of funeral work came in just at the busy time.

The floral displays in some of the florists' windows in the West End were of the highest order. Waldbart on Grand avenue had a magnificent display of all kinds of blooming plants, which sold at top prices, with demand great. Mrs. Ayers, Ellison & Tesson and Mary Ostertag, on the same street, also made grand displays and had on sale plants and cut flowers of the highest order. Fred Weber, Miss Newman, Theo. Miller and Kalisch had a fine trade in cut flowers and plants. Their display of Easter stock was fine. C. C. Sanders also had a good sale on cut stuff and plants. C. Young & Sons Co. had their large store profusely decorated with fine flowering plants of all kinds. Trade was good all of the past week with them. Riessen Floral Co. on Broadway had a fine display in both of their stores. Harrisiis, palms, hydrangeas, callas, ferns and bulb stock in pans and a fine assortment of cut flowers made a most attractive decoration. The South End florists report a great plant sale. Schray, Beyer, Fillmore, Kruse and Bruenig are more than pleased with their Easter trade. Cut flowers also had a good sale with them. All of the above are well cleaned out of Easter stock. Eggeling Floral Co. on South Grand avenue made a fine display of Easter plants of all kinds and cut flower trade was fully up to their expectations.

The stock that came at the wholesale houses was fairly good and quite plentiful. Good firsts in roses were scarce, but a great many seconds came in which should have been cut three days before, and would have brought a better price then. But then this is always the case on days like this. They hold them back for better prices which they never get, but they don't seem to learn. Carnations were not plentiful and all sold well and at good prices. Quite a lot of fancy stuff brought as much as at Christmas, and none sold lower than $3 per 100. I think a great mistake is made by some of our commission men in selling carnations in thousand lots on a day like Easter, when one man gets all at $1.50 per 100 in order to undersell his neighbor. When others come who are willing to pay 3 cents for the same stuff it is all sold. This is not a fair deal to his shippers, and the sooner the growers find this out the better it will be for them financially.

Violets were not so plentiful as was expected and not half enough came in to supply the demand. Harrisiis were scarce, both cut blooms and plants; quite a lot of callas were in, which sold well. Other bulb stuff was very plentiful; valley was fine and sold well; also Romans, Dutch hyacinths and daffodils, but in tulips the colored stuff went to the dump pile and only the lighter shades sold well. More of this stock came in than the demand warranted and quite a lot was left over after the rush at the commission houses.

All the above stock was sold at the prices quoted in the last issue of the Review.

Notes.

Arthur G. Babcock of Cleveland, Ohio, is in the city. He came with a shipment of trees, mostly Carolina poplars, as a gift to the citizens of St. Louis. Mr. Babcock says he will personally supervise the distribution of these trees, which will be planted by the Board of Education in the grounds of the various schools. The trees are an especially fine lot, with vigorous roots and well topped. If properly planted Mr. Babcock says that not one of them should die. Mr. F. C. Miller of 4142 Nebraska avenue has been selected by the citizens' committee to care for the trees. He will deliver the trees to anyone with an order from Chairman Koch. Mr. Miller is said to be a practical gardener and one who thoroughly understands trees.

Mrs. Max Herzog celebrated her birthday last week. Quite a number of her lady friends spent the afternoon at the house, and in the evening the younger folks arrived.

Mr. Gus Eggeling, the South Grand avenue florist, is laid up with a bad case of rheumatism, and had a hard time of it during the Easter rush. I sympathize with those who suffer with this much dreaded complaint, as I speak from experience. J. J. B.

BALTIMORE.

Easter in Baltimore.

Before Good Friday we had ten days of magnificent spring weather; that day brought a rain which kept people indoors and compressed the Easter trade into one day. Saturday morning early there was a heavy rain for several hours, and a shower in the afternoon, but the rest of the day was clear and bright, and market men, stores and fakirs all did a thriving trade.

On the whole trade was satisfactory. The best sellers in cut flowers were carnations and violets—and the latter everywhere were in short supply. Roses were of rather lower than average quality and not so much wanted, whilst Beauties did not seem to be in as great demand as usual. Dutch stuff was overdone, apparently everywhere, and much less will be planted another season, it is probable. Harrisii lilies seemed to be in rather exceptional supply, prices being lower than are customary. Indeed, prices usually were not so high as in years gone by, and many think that so far as this market is concerned Easter will not see hereafter the sudden and great advance in prices heretofore characteristic of the holiday.

The decorations of the flower stores were never so lavish and beautiful. The windows in Charles street were veritable floral bowers and attracted great attention and admiration. The market display was abundant and handsome, and great activity was the rule far into the night.

Following are reports from some of the trade:

Wm. J. Halliday: Stuff was good and in ample supply, and the trade was better than last year. Plants sold well, and there seemed no especial favorites in sorts or in colors. Everything of good quality went off.

John Cook: Sold everything we had. Trade in plants greatly increased over previous years, and additional space had to be secured in the neighborhood to store stock. No especial plants in requisition; all the old favorites sold well.

Halliday Bros.: Glad to be living after the work done. Made a record of Easter sales hitherto unapproached, and everything is cleaned out. Growing plants sold better than ever before. All the usual favorites went; no preference seemed marked. Both stores, on Baltimore and Charles streets, were equally busy.

S. Feast & Sons: No complaint to make in any direction; trade far above last year. Everything and all colors in good request and supply ample, except perhaps first-class violets and pink roses, a few more of each of which could have been handled. Plants sold better than usual. Japan cherries caught popular favor, and Ramblers regained their old popularity, if, indeed, they had lost any. Our fancy arrangements had the call. Ribbons were used as much as heretofore. Both stores ahead of 1901.

Edw. A. Seidewitz: People were crazy on violets, everybody wanted them. The supply hardly enough, and valley was substituted. All cut flowers sold well. In colors pink and white went well, but there seemed no discrimination for any particular colors or combinations.

Chas. E. Smith & Co.: Fine trade. Our Liberty street store did hardly as well as last year, but on So. Charles street trade was heavy. All colors went, but in roses Brides and Golden Gates seemed to lead. Ramblers were in great favor, and azaleas never more so.

Robert L. Graham: Best Easter we ever had.

John E. Berl: Easter trade was good.

George Siddons: Trade never so good.

Mrs. Charles Held: Violets in great demand—"the rage." Supply was entirely insufficient. Some bouquets we made up for ladies' wear contained 800 each. Dutch stuff was too much in evidence. Plants went well, hydrangeas and azaleas being in great request. Never had such an Easter trade before. Roses were rather short of our requirements.

Easter.

At a somewhat early writing it is hardly safe to venture an opinion of the Easter business. We believe, however, it has been fully up to recent years, and on the whole, an advance. Church decorations have not been such an important item as they were some years ago, but everybody knows that has dropped. The great demand for our plants and flowers is occasioned by the beautiful desire that you want to make some one else happy and incidentally please yourself by doing a good act.

It is rather difficult to say what plant took the lead. It is a good job, there is such a diversity in taste. The lily, in numbers, no doubt, was the largest, but in value the azaleas ran it a close second and Crimson Ramblers next with a great assortment following. In cut flowers the old stand-bys of roses, carnations and violets, with a very brisk demand for the latter. Beauties sold from $6 to $10; the Bridesmaid type at $3.50 to $5; carnations from 75 cents to $2 and violets from $2 to $3. Bulbous flowers were in light demand and valley was not asked for quite as much as usual.

The all important element of weather was greatly in our favor. It is true that after a week of sunshine and genial warmth the unthinking may grumble about a Saturday that was slightly showery and windy with the temperature about 45 degrees, but if you will only think what we have had on the 15th of April many a year, you should be grateful beyond measure.

J. H. Rebstock had a branch in one of the best portions of Main street; Palmer delivered with an automobile; Anderson had two extra wagons and two push carts; Louie Neubeck was so busy that he could not be civil over the telephone; Adams found it impossible to even make a call next door for lunch; Miss Rachel Rebstock smiled so broadly at the general results that articulation became difficult toward evening; C. D. Zimmerman increased two inches in height and one inch in breadth; John Buttolph of Upper Main street says this was his first whole Easter and he is much encouraged—and those are all I interviewed up to date.

I believe Easter of 1902 will be remembered as a most prosperous season by all florists who had good plants and flowers to sell. Those who came in contact with multi-millionaires are, of course, feeling better than those who only deal with the common people, because wealth is rising in inverted pyramids and leaving less to be divided at the base.

CLEVELAND.

Easter Trade.

After three weeks of the finest weather ever known here in March Good Friday was ushered in with a wind and rain storm that covered this entire section, giving the florists in general a chance to feel one of the colors most sought after, namely, the "blues." This weather continued up to 10 a. m. Saturday, then it began to clear away and by afternoon we had ideal Easter weather which continued until Sunday morning, when the wind and rain set in and continued all day, and is still at it, at the present writing, Tuesday morning. The extra fine weather the first of the month brought out the flowers in fine shape so there was an abundant supply of everything.

At the market house all the stands were arranged very nicely. As usual there were prizes offered for the best arranged and largest variety of plants and flowers, which were awarded as follows: H. Berger, first; J. Mollenkopf, second; and G. M. Naumann, third. Casper Aul had a very tastily arranged stand, as did Mrs. Utzinger and A. Stein. A. Schmitt had some of the finest azaleas ever shown here; they were all in medium sizes and sold well. S. N. Pentecost had his stand filled with spiraeas and extra fine hybrid roses and Crimson Rambler roses. H. Hart had a fine display of bulb stuff; also some fine lilies and hybrid roses, and great quantities of well grown cinerarias. Bulb stuff in pots and pans had the largest call at the market; in plants, I think, roses took the lead, although spiræas, azaleas and hydrangeas sold well; the smaller sized plants sold best. Cut flowers of all kinds sold well, especially violets.

A call at the stores revealed a difference of opinion. C. Graham of A. Graham & Son, reports a decrease in sales; that there was no difference in the demand over last year, and that cut flowers sold equally as well as plants. J. M. Gasser & Co. report a decrease in sales; that plant trade was better than cut flower trade and that violets had the call above all other flowers. C. M. Wagner reports trade about the same as last year; he did not notice any difference in the demand for anything in particular; here violets semed to have the call. J. Eadie also reports a decrease; cut flowers and plants sold equally well. H. Hart reports an increase in the sales and also that he got better prices for what he had to sell. Smith & Fetters report a large increase over last year. Crimson Ramblers seemed to be in the lead with this firm, although azaleas and genistas sold well, and lilies were in great demand. They had to stop taking orders for violets at 3 p. m. and were then about 2,500 short. They handled some very large Crimson Ramblers and found a ready sale for them.

John Merkel & Son of Mentor sent in the finest Ramblers ever seen in Cleveland which were grown in 10-inch pots and were four feet high and very well flowered. They had some specimen plants, grown two in a 12-inch pot, five feet high and four feet through, that were a mass of bloom. S. N. Pentecost had a very fine display of Ramblers, hybrids and lilies, and reports an increase over last year's sales. A. Schmitt of Glennville reports an increase over last year, with a large demand for bulb stuff. Azaleas did not sell as well with this firm and white ones were a drug. Roses seemed to have the call here. The demand for plants seemed to be greater than that for cut flowers, although carnations sold extra well. G. M. Naumann reports a decrease from last year's sales, with bulbs in the lead. He found that small plants sold better than large ones, especially in azaleas. The demand for violets here was also greater than the supply, and everything in the way of a carnation was picked up very readily.

Prices ruled about the same as heretofore; carnations, from $3 to $8; roses, $4, $8 and $12; lilies, $15 and $20; tulips, $3 to $6; daffodils, $4 and $5, and hyacinths, from $4 to $10 per 100.

The concensus of opinion here is, that as good as the Easter trade was with the stormy weather that prevailed and the absence from the city of a great many society people, it would have been at least 25 per cent better, notwithstanding the earliness of the date, if we had had fine weather the Thursday and Friday before Easter. It is the humble opinion of your correspondent that there were more plants grown and sold, also more cut flowers handled and disposed of, than ever were before in the history of the florists' business in Cleveland.

CINCINNATI.

Everybody reports a fine Easter trade and all kinds of stock well sold out. Callas went rather slowly, but they were the exception. Roses fell short of the demand. Carnations, in fancy varieties, were about equal to the demand, but in ordinary grade they were way short, many orders being unfilled. There was bulbous stock in great quantities, and although it sold very well, there was a surplus. There were plenty of Harisii lilies to fill all orders. Violets, too, were plenty and sold well. There were very few single ones to be had, consequently they brought top market price. Prices were well maintained, with roses and carnations held very stiff owing to shortage.

I believe from all reports that this year shows a healthy increase over last Easter, which is encouraging to the progressive florists. Just how much it is hard to tell, but the fact remains that more flowers were sold for this Easter than were ever before sold at a holiday in this city.

This week is starting in with old-time March weather—high winds, some snow and rather cold. There is not much stock in sight and just about enough trade to use it up. Prices obtained are about those obtained before Easter prices went into effect. Several wedding decorations and funerals of noted men are stirring up some demand and the outlook is very good.

Mrs. B. P. Critchell, the wife of our park superintendent, is very sick. Every one hopes for a rapid and complete recovery.

Mr. Mathews of Dayton, Ohio, was a caller. C. J. Ohmer.

DENVER, COLO.

Easter trade was just a little better than previous years with prices about the same. Trade did not open up until the last two or three days and then came in a heavy rush. The weather started in Monday very fine, but on Tuesday we were hit by a nice half-rain and half-snow storm and on Friday again we had a typical winter day, which put trade at a stand-still for that day. Saturday turned out bright but cold and while more trade could have been handled it made delivery of plants very hard.

Lilies sold only fairly well, perhaps due to the advanced price of 35c a flower. Spiræas also sold only fairly well and while quality was better than in former years they would not go. Rose plants, azaleas, lilacs and pans of Murillo tulips were most in demand and sold clean out. A few choice baskets of plants went at good prices. In cut flowers the supply was about equal to the demand, with the exception of Beauties, and they were very scarce. Good teas were plentiful and also carnations. Violets had a splendid run and quality extra fine for the season. With bulbous stuff we were as usual overloaded, and sales very poor.

In looking back we find that the public will not stand the same prices for Easter as at Xmas and a plant from $1.00 to $4.00 seems to hit them about right with a few exceptions when a large azalea or a basket might be sold.

P. S.

DETROIT.

All hail the Easter that has just passed as the greatest one for trade ever experienced in our city, for it made no difference as to price if the quality was right; everything sold and the florists are all wearing broad smiles and one of the most pleased ones is E. A. Scribner, who declares he will do nothing for the next week but ride around in his auto (that is when he is not repairing it).

Everything was in fair supply but lilies which in one or two instances were all sold out by 9 a. m. by the retailers, and, they being unable to procure a fresh supply, had to sell substitutes. The weather was fine all week with the exception of Friday, when it rained all day and caused a few extra wrinkles to appear in the faces of some of the most nervous ones, but Saturday was both sellers' and buyers' day and all the stock was placed where it did the most good in the homes of our citizens. One of our local papers in an article on Easter flowers placed the amount spent for same at $65,000, which, I think, a very conservative estimate.

B. Schroeter again decorated the store of one of our leading dry goods houses, using a very large quantity of material; the figures for the job being about $800. Oh, for more of the same kind of merchants, is the cry of the other florists. And now for Decoration Day, and then a well earned rest and a trip to Ashville or some other Ville. Rag.

The weather was very warm with plenty of sunshine several weeks preceding Easter, causing lilies and all other flowering plants to rush a little too fast and the stock of azaleas, tulips and hyacinths was plentiful, but it was generally sold out. Lilies were scarce, owing to the disease, and on Saturday it was impossible to buy any.

John Breitmeyer & Sons made a hit with dwarf azaleas in 6-inch pans, also with Dielytra spectabilis. Violets were a feature with them and sold in large quantities.

Reports from the other stores indicate this as the best Easter to date.

Frank Holznagle had a house of Brunner roses in fine condition and sold them all. They were all grown in boxes and were a grand sight.

Robert Klagge, of Mt. Clemens, picked 150,000 violets for Easter and could have picked more if he could have hired enough pickers. His houses were a grand sight a few days before Easter.

FRANKLIN, PA.

As near as we can estimate from a hasty look at cash book and charge slips, the business done by us during Easter week this year was twice as great as last, and we have a fine display of plants in bloom left. This is mainly because of the very large stock provided, all of which we grew ourselves, and in part because, on account of unfavorable weather conditions, we were unable to get bulbs in from outside as early as usual. The only plant we did not have quite enough of was the Lily (about which we will have something to say soon), our stock of which was smaller than last year.

Best selling plants were azaleas, hyacinths, tulips, daffodils and cinerarias; and in flowers, carnations, lilies, bulbous stock, roses and violets. We had an ample supply of good carnations, of our own growing, and the florist who has that at Christmas, Easter, and May 30th need spend little time in worrying. Certain plants, although offered at reasonable prices, do not sell well here, including acacias, genistas, metrosideros and Crimson Rambler roses.

An increasing number of buyers want a pretty cover of some kind on pots and pans of blooming plants, and for this purpose the ready-made waterproof paper cover without a bottom and having elastic bands to hold it in place, the different sizes of wicker covers, and the Porto Rico mats with silk cord and tassels were the most used. Ribbons, feathers and other millinery for garnishing plants are scarcely required here.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

There was only one thing that prevented the past Easter from being far and away ahead of any previous Easter. Bad weather on Friday and again on Sunday put a damper on business to some extent for the time being. Saturday, however, was an ideal day for handling stock and an enormous business was done. In spite of the bad weather the volume of business was as great as last year with everybody, and several report from 20 to 30 per cent increase. Home-grown stock of cut flowers was good and sold on sight, but shipped stock (specially carnations) were in abundance until they went to sleep altogether. Lilies were decidedly scarce and those who had a few had places for them. Crimson Rambler roses and hydrangeas were in good shape and sold well. Of bulb stuff there was of course plenty, but it all went. One firm reports plant sales as 20 per cent ahead of cut flowers, with the latter equal to Easter of 1901.

The usual Easter prices were easily obtained for everything good, while some of the pickled stock went to the dumps. One department store was selling carnations at 50c per doz., and many were sold, although they were really not worth that much. Of course people who know quality when they see it would not touch that stuff. It has been cold and blustery ever since Sunday a. m. and prices are holding up nicely, though not as high as last week.

John Buheit has resigned his position as receiver for the G. W. Huber establishment and F. Stiltz has been appointed in his place. A. B.

ST. PAUL.

Easter business in this city was one of the best if not the very best ever known to the trade. Stock was good, weather perfect and buyers plentiful.

In potted plants lilies as usual sold well, retailing at 25c per bud and bloom. There was an unusual demand for large plants and more could have been sold at from $3.00 to $5.00 each. Azaleas were also in good demand and sold out early. Hydrangeas were not as popular as usual, though medium size plants were in demand. Roses as usual were in great favor and sold readily. In fact a nicely done Brunner with from 3 to 5 blooms is about the most popular plant sold at Easter. Everybody loves a beautiful rose and it generally sells at sight. Crimson Ramblers well done sold well. There was also sale for quite a good many pots of tulips, hyacinths, daffodils, valleys, etc.

In cut flowers everything sold fairly well. Violets were in great demand. Lilies were also called for in large quantities. There was nothing new or particularly striking in the line of flowers or plants. Porto Rican matting was used sparingly. There was an abundance of crepe paper and ribbon, some plants being nearly smothered with them.

Shipping trade was most excellent. Orders were numerous and of good size and everything sold well and at good figures.

The weather during the week was uniformly good. Deliveries were made without wrapping and losses and complaints were comparatively few. Everybody has been busy and at this writing exact comparisons are not possible, but I think it safe to say that plant sales have increased 15 to 20 per cent over last season and cut flowers sold about even.

There was a good cut of home grown stock, but not enough to go around, and large shipments came in from the East. X. Y. Z.

MILWAUKEE.

Easter.

Easter business was a record breaker. The weather was ideal and shoppers were out in full force. Many did not anticipate the final rush and were unable to handle the business. Everything respectable in the plant line found a ready sale, and with exception of cut lilies it was almost exclusively a plant Easter.

J. M. Fox had an elegant window display of fancy baskets, well filled with various plants and bulbous stock, which caught the eye of purchasers. M. A. McKenny & Co. displayed some fine azaleas, genistas, lilacs, etc., beautifully trimmed up with various shades of chiffon and Porto Rico mats. Currie Bros. had a large display of well-grown plants and made a specialty of lilies. Peter Kapsalis invested mainly in azaleas and paeonies, and made them an attractive feature. Home Bros. had a fine lot of Crimson Ramblers and some attractively arranged hanging baskets, in addition to a general line of Easter plants. On the West Side Mrs. Ennis did a thriving business. Her principal display was American Beauties and fancy carnations and Golden Gate.

Wm. Edlefsen had a double force on hand to handle the products of his own growing, consisting of a large variety of plants and bulbous stock. The Baumgarten Floral Co. arranged their window in a pink effect and Max Reitz displayed principally spiraea, azaleas and deutzias. The outlying florists all received a liberal share of buiness and are well atisfied. Among the growers the C. C. Pollworth Co. brought in nearly a thousand fine grown longifiorums, which found a ready market; also several houses of paeonies, deutzias, lilacs, spiraeas and azaleas, which were right in their prime. Nic Zweifel's crop of fancy Genevieve Lord and Crane came in just right, and Nic is now thinking of building some moro houses.

A notable feature was the large use of palms and ferns in various downtown stores for window decorating.

The supply of cut flowers was fully equal to the demand. Carnations led the call and pink and red roses in good shipping stock sold well. Violets were cleaned up at good figures. Cut lilies were in large demand and none were left over. Chas. Zipnick brought in a fancy lot of pansies, bunched in his own original style, which readily sold on sight.

Incog.

PITTSBURG.

Easter.

Easter trade was good; about 25 per cent better than last year. Everything went, plants and cut flowers, at prices about same as last year; carnations and lilies ran a little scarce; roses were in good supply, also bulbous flowers. In the market an enormous lot of hyacinths were on hand in pots. Some good geraniums in bloom sold before the bulbons plants. In cut flowers the market florists got good prices; $1.25 per doz, for scrub carnation blooms, etc. The weather was rainy Friday and Saturday, but the people had the money to spend and they spent it.

Easter Report.

The week started in cold and dreary. Tuesday the sun came out bright and strong, the weather turned warm, and until Friday finer weather to make flowers bloom could not be desired. It brought out many lilies that were almost despaired of and helped the carnations pop out like popcorn in a frying pan. Friday it rained all day, but Saturday morning all fears were dissipated when old Sol rose bright and majestic in a clear sky, making the day an ideal spring one for Easter business, which commenced with a rush early and lasted far into the night. Never before was there such a demand for flowers and plants, nor such a large supply with which to meet it.

There were enough roses to meet all demands except Beauties. The carnation supply was ample, there being a few of the poorer grades left over. Lilies were the star attraction and they sold like hot cakes.

Beauties in pots and crimson Ramblers sold out clean and quick. What few cinerarias there were on the market just melted out of sight. Azaleas were in large supply and sold well, although a few plants too far open to be desirable were left over. Bulbs in pots and pans went readily and Lady Campbell violet plants in pots were handled by every florist in town and sold well; in fact, in quantity they were next the lily.

One noticeable feature was that novelties in the plant line did not take well, such as cytisus, pæonies, Deutzia gracilis and bottle bush. Sunday it rained all day. As it was the volume of trade on an average was about 25 per cent better than last year. The prevailing prices were: Roses, $1.50 per doz.; Beauties, $3 to $5, and scarce; carnations, 50 cents to $1 per doz., although 75 cents was the popular price; tulips and valley, 50 cents per doz.; narcissus, 75 cents per doz.; violets, which were poor but plentiful, 15 cents per doz.; cut lilies, $2.50 per doz.; pot plants, 20 cents per flower and bud; azaleas, $1 to $2 each, a few fine ones going at $2.50; Beauties in pots and Ramblers, $1.50 to $2 apiece; violets in pans, 25 cents to 75 cents each; bulb stock, 25 cents to $1 per pan, according to size.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

With Easter Saturday came a rain that put a damper on any high-strung florists' mind that had dreams all week of the golden future after Easter that would afford him and family a trip to Europe, the Adirondacks, White Mountains or other places of amusement for the summer. Well, anyway, it rained all day and in the forenoon some did feel blue so that they talked hoarse, but toward evening it cleared up and there was quite a rush all around, as people got to streaming downtown. However, there was no scarcity of stock and no one seemed to be what you would call cleaned out; there was considerable of everything left Sunday morning.

If you could not use spiraeas for design work after Easter, there would hardly be any use in growing any, as they don't sell any more as pot plants, except perhaps a few. Daffodils also moved slowly, as did most of the bulb stuff; Easter lilies and azaleas sold well, and carnations always sell the best of anything. As to prices, well, the least said about them the better. If you were to go by the way people tell you they bought different stuff at different places, there would be quite a variety. There was very little call for sweet peas. They sold very much better from New Year right along up to within a week before Easter, then the call for them stopped.

By the way, I just had a lady from Taunton, Mass., who had engaged flowers here, tell me that lilies were advertised there at $1 per doz. for Easter, and I noticed week before Easter an adv. from the same town in a trade paper quoting them at 12½ to 15 cents. How do these fit together? Perhaps we are nearing a period when we can buy stuff cheaper at retail than at wholesale.

New Bedford had a regular deluge of flower stores this Easter, there were six all told; two were started week before Easter so as to relieve the rush on the old standbys and enable them to close their safe doors. Still all the old ones and also the outsiders are still alive and as chipper and in good spirits as can be.

The most tastefully and handsomely decorated stores were undoubtedly Jahn's and Chamberlain's. Both displayed good taste in arrangement of their stock and derived benefit according to it. You can have a great big store and great big windows and slam them full of stuff and have hundreds of people in there looking at your grandeur, but an elephant isn't a fox and it is not hard to tell which catches the most mice.

The Florists' Manual

by William Scott

Is a book of 224 pages, and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Easter trade was a record breaker this year; lots of blooming plants were sold; the only scarcity was in Harrisii lilies, many of which were diseased; prices ruled about the same as last year. Roses from $1.50 to $2.50 per doz.; hyacinths, $1; carnations, fancy, easily sold for $1 per doz. Take it all around the florists are all satisfied.

Mr. Jacob Schulz made one of the finest displays of Easter plants ever seen in our city, and he was kept busy till late in the night. F. Walker & Co. also had a fine display of azaleas, tulips and lilies; they report a very large business. Nanz & Neuner's store was a floral bazaar and was decorated very finely; they sold lots of flowering plants. Jos. Coenen & Co. did a land office business this Easter and John Bohrman handled it without gloves; their hyacinths and tulips were in fine shape. Fred Haupt's store was a blaze of electric lights and made a beautiful showing on the flowering plants and cut flowers which he had for Easter. Wm. Manu, the lily king, was right in it for Easter and took good care of his trade in the southern part of the city; William is smiling all over. Mrs. C. B. Thompson and Wm. Walker both report a heavy Easter trade.

Frank Lichtefeld, father of Hy Lichtefeld, who has been confined to his bed for several days, is able to be about again and is attending to business.

Easter Sunday came in raw and very cold, which hurt the sale of cut flowers for cemetery purposes to some extent.

Hy Lichtefeld.

Some surprise was caused by the somewhat sudden opening of the retail store at 632 Fourth avenue on Friday last by Mrs. Chas. Rayner in time to catch the Easter trade. Her store, which is very large and attractive, is situated in one of the most desirable blocks on Fourth avenue, and promises, with its two large windows, to afford an excellent opportunity for display. She is connected with the Anchorage Rose Co. and we wish her the success she deserves. Bud.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Everybody had a good business Easter, and from all accounts everything in the plant line was cleaned up. There was a good supply of cut flowers, which sold well with the exception of bulb stock. Carnations sold at from 75 cents to $2.50 per doz.; violets went well but the supply was ample for the demand. As before stated, bulb stock was hard to move, partly on account of the good supply of domestic goods.

In plants, lilies took the lead, with azaleas a good second. White lilacs went like hot cakes and more could have been sold. Prices on cut flowers were much better than ever before, plants going about as usual. Conservative estimates give the business done this year as 40 per cent greater than that of last year.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Easter trade in this city this year has from all accounts eclipsed that of any former years. Rarely is there such a clean up of all sorts of stock. The larger growers were cleaned out of lilies, roses, violets and carnations, and were trying to buy to fill orders as early as Friday. Lilies were of good quality and sold readily at 20c per bloom and bud retail; wholesale, 15c.

Of carnations the supply while large did no more than go round, some of the orders having to be cut in quantity. They were of excellent quality and retailed at 50c and 75c per dozen, a limited quantity of special fancies being sold at $1 per dozen. Wholesale price ranged from $3 per 100 for common to $5 for good grade. In roses Maids, Brides and Meteors were not too plentiful. The demand was brisk at $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen, retail; wholesale price, $7 to $8 per 100. Beauties retailed at $1.50 per dozen for shorts; mediums and long stems bringing prices according to the grade. The demand for violets was good and by Saturday there were few in sight.

The sales of pot plants, such as azaleas, cyclamen, primroses, etc., was a slight improvement on last year. Bulbous stock commanded a fair sale at good prices. Most of the growers think this line has been overdone during the past few years and have decided to cut their orders almost in half. Violets in pans were eagerly sought after and were soon cleaned up at 75c each for 7-inch pans.

The Dunkley Floral Co. express entire satisfaction with their Easter trade, this being one of their best.

An early Sunday morning visit to the Van Bochove establishment showed by the empty benches and plants denuded of bloom a sure index of the extent of their trade. It took them to a late hour on Saturday night to satisfy all their customers. They estimate this as one of their best Easters.

Mr. Sam'l Batson had a fine cut of extra grade carnations, which he shipped to Cincinnati, receiving good returns. He confines himself entirely to the culture of carnations, Armazindy (pink and striped) being his favorites are largely grown here and are really excellent.

Jack Calder, from the North End, has been sending in some very nice carnations.

The Central Michigan Nursery Co. engaged part of a drug store in the city as a sales place.

The weather was favorable for the safe delivery of stock of all kinds.

Visitors: Mrs. Foster, Plainwell; Mr. Dew, Albion, Mich. RIBES.

TOLEDO, O.—Fire did damage to the amount of about $1,900 to the greenhouse and stock of F. A. ImOberstag last Friday night. Rose house partly burned, together with boiler room; caused damage to about $100; broken glass in rose house and another, about $400; a "busted boiler," which can, however, be repaired; a crop of roses, 300 Easter lilies, a batch of hyacinths, tulips and Von Sion, all in fine shape for Easter sales, and about 9,000 young bedding stock, Asparagus Sprengeri, mum stock, etc. No insurance.

YOUR valuable paper is superb, also artistic. Am always glad to see the next number.—PAUL STARK, Liberty, Mo.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

The Past Easter.

Easter was good and Easter was bad—far worse than many, through business pride, wish to acknowledge. The weather of course was somewhat to blame, but there were other graver reasons. It would appear from a careful study of the Easter trade in New York City that while a tremendous amount of stock was disposed of there was not quite that annual increase in trade that florists reasonably anticipate. The best flower buyers seemed to have preferred to purchase jewelry or favors that will last forever and a day than to selecting flower or plant to last but the hour, and in the most cases the difference in cost was or is very small. A great many good people of standing, and generous people, too, mind you, have learned to look upon the florist as an unreasonable extortionist; and in calm reason can you blame them? Of course these grand palace stores, with all their glitter and trappings, demand larger incomes than the ones we used to know, but while the average flower buyer once in a while likes to send his best girl something from the crystal palace, he prefers the plain store for the great bulk of his trade.

The American people are not inclined to pay the bills for the florist's variety. We have a most remarkable illustration of this here in New York. In a narrow street with most undesirable surroundings there is a small, plain basement store, to which the very best people (I mean wealthy flower buyers) go regularly for their flowers. All the New York florists know that this store does more business than most of the great big ones and they shut their eyes to the reason. The flower business is a most hazardous one; the goods we handle are fleetingly perishable, and while light and cleanliness are absolutely necessary, the over-elaborate pompousness is not, and mark you, the time is soon coming when this will be made far more apparent.

The present holiday prices of plants and flowers are too high. There was a time when Bon Silene roses could not be grown for less than 20 cents each, wholesale; they got down to 20 cents per 100. It was alike with other flowers until now a reaction seems to consume every desire that the people must buy whatever is offered and must pay whatever price is asked; that is a foolish dream, because flowers are not an actual necessity and that which is not can never be put in an exclusive cycle. The cost of production is yearly being minimized.

This year we hear the annual Easter Monday resolve made by the large plant growers that they will neither import nor grow another Easter plant, which is almost amusing. We would very much like to see them keep this resolve, for at least one year, and not touch any import of plant or bulb; it would certainly redound to the benefit of every one in this country and the American people would appreciate it, and furthermore, there is enough here to satisfy all demands. It is charged that foreign growers ask too much for their stock, particularly in the case of Azalea indica and other leaders upon which foreigners depend for a living on the American market. Well, why not combine to fix a fair, reasonable price or leave them alone? In the case of lilies we know that many a poor American florist has been almost reduced to beggary, not this year but several years, by the almost total failure of his lilies. The remedy lies only in the grower's own hand. Too often he is overanxious to fill up a house or an empty bench with anything in a pot.

Pretty, inexpensive conceits in plant baskets paid best in all the cities. As we have stated before, people shop a good deal and can compare prices on plant or flowers, but you can keep them guessing on the value of your own work. There were lots of absurd stories about novelties and exclusive designs here, but there was nothing new except the twist of a bow or two and the appearance of one or two plants. We were vastly amused to read about So and So having old English potato baskets and others having butcher baskets and others nests, all of which, and more, my friends, were in use at 905 Broadway nigh twenty years ago. We did see some very pretty plants of Erica ventricosa, E. transluceus and E. Cavendishii. E. melanthera, and the persolutas were not quite up to former seasons, and we missed E. cupressiana. Epacris were few. Roses were poor, except a few Crimson Ramblers, and the rest you know about. Azaleas sold well when offered at a reasonable price. One thing, the small semi-retail grower or the store needs have a variety, but the large grower can specialize. It is to be hoped that lessons taught this Easter will be remembered.

Spring Decorations.

Weddings, etc., used up a considerable lot of stock left over from Easter and there will be a continuous and steady demand for respectable looking flowering plants from now on. Spring blossoms will be everywhere in a few weeks and you cannot do better than show and use your forced ones. We recently fixed a luncheon table for a party of sixteen young ladies given in honor of one who is soon to be married. We arranged a large Venetian bowl of peach, almond, cherry and apple blossoms for the center-piece, having the branches gracefully hanging toward the guests. Delicate sprays of the Bridal wreath (Spiræa prunifolia) were tied with Cupid bows of narrow pink velvet ribbon. These formed an irregular and transparent wreath 18 inches from the edge of the table. Cherokee roses were used for the finger bowls. No heavy greens were used. The vase was shown here and there, and nature supplied most of the beauty. On another occasion we used several hundred jonquils in a green vase and made a round garland wreath of yellow pansies on a very light fringe of light-colored Farleyense fern. Yellow freesia for finger bowls. Everyone giving large entertainments just now seeks spring-like effects in decorations, and the market is flooded with good material, or at least stock that by intelligent handling can be made to produce excellent effects.

Decorations for the Breakfast to Prince Henry in St. Louis, arranged by Ellison & Tesson

When taking orders for decorative work where you intend to use your own ideas, though as a matter of course you must create the opinion that you intend using only the finest, it is not always necessary for you to buy the most expensive. Brains can very often make inferior stock look the superior of what is now styled "specials" and forty extras. Mme. de Watteville, Cusin, Mrs. Oliver Ames, Sarah Nesbit or highly colored Golden Gate roses go remarkably well with any kind of fruit blossoms such as we've mentioned above. Spiræas, deutzias, mock orange, lilac or any such are specially useful for weddings, but it's useless to put such flowers too high or where people cannot see or determine what they are. Magnolias are easily brought into bloom and are splendid for all sorts of work. What could be prettier than an avenue of small magnolias? Remember avenues or hedges of any one variety of showy growing plants are the most effective kind of arrangements and should be recommended in all extensive work. You can always use the Easter "left-overs" for filling in, but we would advise that you don't at present keep either your window or store spoiled by the things you could not sell last week. Have them relegated to the rear and keep at least your window always looking fresh. This can only be done by having fresh, new stock to the front.

Fine work can be done with sweet peas, white or yellow daisies, pansies and many of the small popular flowers. Many of them need wiring singly, but people appreciate them, and it's a mistake to always imagine the tip-top scarce article only is sought. It would be a bad day for the business were it to narrow down to American Beauties, Bride, Maid and Meteor. We must keep variety on the market and the retailer is the only one that can do so. We must not be content to display flowers as they come from the market. The grower does not claim much of the artistic tinge. Most of his stock requires rebunching in order to show it to advantage. Many a good thing is ignored or despised because of imperfect presentation. Small white willow or green baskets of trailing arbutus go well; tie a soft-hued bow on the handle.

Get your pansies out in boxes and vases and use good soil and put colors in blocks. An immense quantity of pansies will be used this spring. Make a display outside your store. Nothing finer than a well-made wreath of carnation "Viola Allen" tied with white or warm colored cattleya ribbon; very little green.

TABLE DECORATION.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of the decorations for the breakfast to Prince Henry at the St. Louis Club, St. Louis, during his visit to that city. They were arranged by Ellison & Tesson.

CARNATION NOTES.

If this pleasant spring weather keeps up we will be planting our carnations in the field in a few days. This is a job that should be done just as early as possible, as soon as the ground is in good working condition. We may have a few light frosts yet but after April 20 we are not likely to have frosts that will injure a sturdy young carnation plant. We have on several occasions had them covered with snow and also had a crust frozen over the ground without any apparent damage. Of course we would not advise anyone to court trouble along this line, but with the present methods of early planting, etc., it is very beneficial to have your plants out early enough so they can take advantage of the fine growing weather of May and June.

In selecting ground for planting carnations we would prefer a rather high lying location. Carnations like good drainage and with such a location this would be assured. A good rich sandy loam is also desirable as the plants will lift better in the fall from such a soil which will crumble easily than they will from a stiff clayey soil. If the soil on which you must plant is too stiff you can help matters some by giving a good dressing of stable manure and the more straw there is in it the better for the ground. This, however, should have been done during the winter so it could be pretty well rotted by this time. We also find that plowing in the fall helps to loosen up a stiff soil as will also a dressing of lime or wood ashes. Whatever you do, though, don't plant your carnations in a soil that is inclined to bake and tear the roots off your plants when digging them up in the fall.

When you are ready to plant see that the young plants are plenty moist enough and unless they are rather wet it would be well to give them an extra watering just before knocking them out of the pots. Get as many men as you possibly can onto the job. Have some knocking out plants while others are planting and see that the plants are getting into the ground as soon after they are knocked out of the pots as possible, for a few hours of laying around will give them a severe check. It is surprising how quick a ball of soil will dry out when it is exposed to the warm, dry air. On some places they have boys to drop the plants along the line and men to go after them planting. We do not like that way as it often happens that the boys get ahead of the men and the plants will lay with the roots exposed to the sun a half hour or more, and the plants suffer. We use boxes about 14x18 inches and each man takes a box and slides it along as he plants and we find that a man can plant almost as many plants as he can when they are dropped for him and they get into the ground in much better condition.

We do not plant in beds as many first-rate growers do, but we plant in rows across the field just as it is. Plant 10 inches apart in the row, and the rows about 15 inches apart. I am taking for granted that you use a hand cultivator during the summer to keep the soil loosened up. I worked for a man a few years ago who had a horse so well trained that he could cultivate his carnations with a shovel plow. This certainly saved him a good deal of time, but I don't think the work was done so well as it can be done by hand, as he could not run so close to the plants for fear of uprooting them. In that case we had to plant rows 2 ft. apart, which makes them take up considerably more room. You will also find it good policy to have one of the men go over the day's planting in the evening with the cultivator to loosen up the soil which is sure to be packed down considerably while planting and likely to bake if it lies a few days without rain. It will only take a short time and it will help to keep your ground in good shape.

And last but not least let me urge you, practice crop rotation as much as you can to prevent stem-rot, etc. There is no better way of fighting that dread disease than by never planting carnations on the same ground two consecutive seasons, and if you can let two or three seasons lapse before returning to the same patch it will be all the better. But if you are obliged to plant in the same ground year after year you should apply a heavy dressing of lime or wood ashes each spring before plowing and be sure to clean off all the plants that were not housed last fall; in fact you should do the latter in the fall each year. If you have decaying carnation plants in the soil it is very likely to bring on stem-rot among those that are supposed to grow in the soil.

One of the handiest implements in getting the field ready for planting is the "Swivel" or "side hill" plow. With the ordinary plow it is a lot of bother to plow small patches of ground at a time, but with the above named implement you can plow up one furrow or a hundred just as you choose and have no trenches or ridges in your field and you can have the pleasure of having fresh plowed ground to plant in right through planting time, which will not only facilitate the work, but will also save your men's tempers during the short dry spells.

Seasonable Hints.

Kaiserins and Meteors which have been planted for early summer bloom should now be cultivated regularly once a week, stirring the soil evenly to the depth of one inch, taking care not to go too near the stem of the plant. This should be done when the soil is in a half dry condition. If done while the soil is too wet it leaves it knotty and lumpy. The surface should always be smooth and fine so as not to expose the young roots too much to the sun. As soon as the stirring is finished the bench should receive a thorough watering. Now that the days are long and plenty of sunshine the syringe should be used freely twice a day. This will keep spider in check, cool off the house and produce the requisite amount of moisture. The afternoon syringing should be done about two o'clock as this gives ample time for foliage to become dry before sundown.

Staking, tying and disbudding should also be attended to. Stems which are kept in an upright position are much more vigorous, produce stronger eyes, and are much easier kept clear of insects than those allowed to scramble over the bench. Disbudding as practised by experts is more than simply nipping off the buds. The bud before removal should be allowed to develop till it shows color, it should then be carefully cut off along with the three or four topmost eyes, some even advocate taking half the stem. This puts more vigor into the remaining eyes and has a tendency to lessen the crop of small blind wood so detrimental to the plant.

Firing should still be kept up though the danger of hard frost is over, so that the house can have ventilation most of the time. Letting out the fires and closing the ventilators to keep the house warm produces a soft spongy growth which is very susceptible to the attacks of mildew.

ANOTHER LILY TROUBLE.

Last summer when we opened the cases of Japanese Longiflorum that we had ordered, we were greatly pleased as they seemed to be the best lilies we had ever received.

They were potted promptly, and started growth quickly, and uniformly, and for some time all seemed to be doing well.

When they were about four inches high we filled a number of large pans with them, taking the plants to do so from the smaller pots in which they had started, and choosing for this purpose those that were as near the same size and vigor as possible. Growing in the same pans, the plants must have had the same treatment, but at a certain stage development of a portion of them seemed to be arrested, and to-day we have pans in which two or three plants are over two feet high while the others in the same pan are only about five inches, as is shown in the illustration.

The same conditions exist in the plants that were allowed to remain in the pots in which they were first planted, and we have set aside a large proportion of our stock so stunted, thinking that possibly they would flower later if grown cooler, but the plants are at a standstill and the lower leaves are beginning to turn yellow as if ripening. We have had some good lilies from the lot of bulbs received, but fully one-half will be a total loss, together with the money and time expended on them, and although we bought more bulbs than usual, we will have fewer flowers.

The growth does not indicate that the plants are diseased, and we have never had much trouble with the so-called lily disease, which we think is due partly to improper treatment in forcing; in fact we bought a small lot of Harrisii last season, almost every plant of which flowered well.

If the importer sent the longiflorums to us as he received them, he is scarcely to blame, as the bulbs seemed to be all right; but there is fault somewhere, and the loss to us and to others who have had the same experience is a serious one.

One or two causes for the trouble have suggested themselves to me, although I have not made a particular examination of any of the affected plants, but simply judge from their general appearance. Florists seem more and more anxious every year to get their stock of lilies earlier, so as to get a good start in the race; and in response to this general demand perhaps a portion of the bulbs have been taken up before they have matured their growth, and these have been mixed with those that were better ripened. If this is true, then we can blame the growers, and ourselves.

Perhaps, to supply the great demand, with a short crop at hand, bulbs that had been held over in cold storage have been added to those that were all right; and we the victims of the practice have been demonstrating that such bulbs do not grow into dollars. If the last suggestion is correct the dealers who do this are foolish and shortsighted, as florists will not buy bulbs that will not produce flowers.

If any one has positive proof of the cause of the trouble, I hope he will enlighten those of us who have not.

W. T. Bell.

Franklin, Pa., Mar. 31, 1902.

Brattleboro, Vt.—C. E. Allen reports Easter trade as very satisfactory.

BOUGAINVILLEA SANDERIANA.

J. B. writes: "I would like to have some information in regard to growing Bougainvillea G. Sanderiana. When should cuttings be made in order to have fine plants for Christmas? Do they make satisfactory Christmas plants?"

In the first place I have never seen or grown any that were in time for Christmas and don't think it can be managed, but they make a grand Easter plant. We had a few years ago some 50 plants in 7 and 8-inch pots covered with bloom but in this more or less provincial town they did not sell anything like our anticipation and those that did we heard poor reports of. The leaves dropped quickly, and I consider them not a good house plant, but they are a most beautiful decorative plant and anyone who has seen the grand plants of bougainvillea at the model establishment of W. K. Harris of Philadelphia a week or so before Easter cannot but be charmed with their grace and refined beauty.

They root from the young growths (not too green) in January in the ordinary cutting bed. Plant the young plants out of doors in early June in warm light soil. Lift before there is the slightest danger of frost and keep during winter in temperature of 55 to 60 degrees. The following spring shift into 6 or 7-inch pots and plunge in frame during the warm months in the broad sun. If kept well syringed and watered they will make a good growth. When brought indoors in October or late September it is well to keep them cool and rather dry and they will then ripen the growth of the summer. At New Years you can give them a shift if really necessary but give them more heat and moisture and they will then begin to show flower.

The bougainvillea is a tropical plant. The old type glabra will do no harm if kept quite cool in winter time and becomes almost deciduous, but under those conditions if planted out in border or large box in greenhouse it does not flower till June or July.

William Scott.

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

A reader all the way from Spokane, Wash., says he was interested in the article on "Valley" but is not quite clear on one point. He says: "W. S. gives the temperature of the room, also the temperature of the sand. I would like to know if the case enclosing the valley is sufficiently open that the overhead temperature for the valley is same as the room or not."

Yes, it practically is, and when covered with a thin wooden shutter and at other times, with a covering of cheese-cloth, it is likely on sunny days to be even slightly cooler. The sand is six inches deep and although near the slates it is in January and February up to 85 degrees its surface is quite cool. The box or frame is by no means a tight affair. It is not built to keep in heat or moisture as a fern case is made and if the covering of shutters and cheese-cloth is raised an inch or so above edges of frame so much the better. I noticed during March that in the house which the valley box is in we had to keep the temperature up to 75 degrees to bring in some Japan lilies and the valley was not as strong, only proving that a low atmospheric temperature and a strong sand heat are the right conditions. As the season advances less heat in the sand is needed.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Lilies.

I was exchanging opinions recently with a most successful grower in one of the big eastern cities and he remarked with the greatest good sense that in ordering your Japan longiflorums you should not ask for them too early. This is the best advice and as I am paid to give advice I give it to you, my affectionate and intimate reader. The Japan bulbs, as is well known, are of no use for early winter bloom; in fact, the majority of growers do well by getting them in flower at an early Easter, and so we have to depend on the Bermuda bulbs for our Christmas lilies and many growers rely on them altogether.

Now about the Japan bulbs. We heard a lecture by the intelligent and traveled Mr. Farquhar of Boston last August during the convention week here. Most of the members of the S. A. F. were out at the Pan-American viewing the electric lights of the Rainbow City or the chestnuts of the Midway, but some, and a good many, enjoyed the intellectual treat and optical feast of the lecture known as "Fair Japan." The particular part of that lecture which interests us was where Mr. Farquhar told us that the lilies were nearly all grown in the northern islands, where the climate was about like southern Pennsylvania, although he did not say it was similar. As soon as the flowers are developed and before they have any chance to ripen the bulbs are dug, because the demand is to get them here early. The consequence is we have many failures in our Japan bulbs. It is not the same disease that the Bermuda bulbs have shown for some years past, but just as disappointing to the grower, and what you can easily recognize as resulting from the attempt to force an unripened bulb.

Then Mr. Farquhar went on to say that if this bulb industry (which I understand is carried on in Japan in a most promiscuous and desultory way) was an industry of the southern island of that empire archipelago the bulbs would be ripened in time for us to get them in good season and they would force without the many failures. The lesson to be taught from all this is that you should not ask that your bulbs be delivered too early. In fact if you told the drummer you bought of that you would not receive any bulbs before the midle of October or first of November you would do well. Of this I am sure because I have noticed that the Japan lilies that are brought in late soon overtake those that were in the house for two months previous and arrived in flowering time equally on time. All of the above is written so that you can say to your wholesale house, or drummer, as the circumstances may be, "I don't want any Japan lilies unless you are sure they were not dug till September."

Azaleas.

I forgot in my last week's notes on left-over stock to mention the azalea. Time was when I recommended that the best way to dispose of them was to throw them in the dump pile. It's only a fool that does not alter his mind, and so we have found for several years that what we will call the left-over stock will make the best of plants. Be sure and pick off the old flower seed pods and keep the plants in a rather cool house. If they are very shabby then you can cut them back even to the "old wood," and the break they will make will give you lots of flower. But if you have them under your own care and they are good and healthy then there is no need of cutting them back at all. Let the growth they make now or shortly be the growth, and from it you will get surely a full supply of flower, but whether you leave all the growth on or cut them back, let them rest in a cool house for the next six weeks, not particularly because they want a cool house but because you are busy and they receive no harm.

Roses.

It just occurred to me that of all things a florist (of the common sort) is asked for was at this time of year roses. If beds of roses could be produced as we have seen and grown them there would be some encouragement to talk to a customer about the hybrid perpetual type, but too often they are disappointing. Either they are badly planted and managed and the rose is overpowered by the strong growth which in ignorance is allowed to grow from the stock, either briar or Manetti. Many of the best hybrid perpetual roses make but a poor growth on their own roots and the budded stock has to be used. It is your duty to educate your customer to cut out the sucker growths. Perhaps a more prolific cause of disappointment is the crude and ungardener-like way of planting and care for the first year. When customers say they want a bed of roses and you have to tell them that they cannot expect blooms the first year it takes a little moral courage, but such is the fact. Such a bed of roses as we had at the Pan-American last June and July was gratification enough for a year's work. There was one bed of 500 Paul Neyron and another of 500 Ulrich Brunner and many beds of other varieties, but I mention those two because they were so grand, and when the venerable Mr. Ellwanger, of Rochester, put his hand on my shoulder one day toward the end of June and said: "Mr. S., this is as fine a show of roses as I ever saw," I thought I had not lived in vain.

Now it is all easily done and very simple. To begin with, you can buy from many firms first class stock. I like the American budded stock better than the imported. Plant as early as you can after the ground is dry and fit to work. You will receive plants with three or four canes and they will be 18 inches to 2 feet long. Plant 18 inches apart each way and plant deep; you cannot kill a rose by planting deep. When well and firmly planted by thoroughly watering the roots and soil before you fill in the hole, the next operation is to take a pair of shears and cut down every cane to within 3 or 4 inches of the ground. Don't be afraid, the harder you cut them back the stronger will be the growth and you will get growths from 3 to 5 feet long. I may as well halt here and cool my enthusiasm by saying that you will not get these great results without the soil that a rose, an oak or a strawberry must have—a heavy or clay loam, and if you want the best results with the roses let one-fourth of its bulk for the first foot be cow manure.

There are other things to observe, but none so important as the close cutting down. After they have started growth, or say about June 1, put on an inch of half-decayed stable manure; it will keep the roots cool and moist and do a little fertilizing. Several heavy waterings are necessary if the months of May, June and July are dry, but after that a watering would be useless, as you want the wood to ripen so that it will endure the frosts of winter. In some localities these roses need protection. If you were sure of a foot of snow all winter no protection would be needed, but we don't get that every winter (particularly that region where Mr. Carmody intends to move to) and a lot of evergreen boughs thrown in among them to the depth of a foot is the very best covering. In the absence of that put 8 or 9 inches of the lightest stable litter or leaves. Don't think of tying each plant up with straw because it is useless and no protection to the plant where it is most in need of it.

Now I come to another cutting down. If the winter has killed them down to within six inches of the ground no harm is done, because you would want to cut them down. Don't make a mistake, you must cut them down again, leaving only three or four eyes, which is the only way to produce a fine growth and flower. This story is somewhat out of season, but it seems to me that the rose question is so much in evidence every spring, and with so many of our patrons, that a few words as above would not be out of place. Some one will say, "How about the next year?" Simply cut them back to within two eyes of the previous summer's growth and you will always have a dwarf plant with the finest flowers. Another lady will ask, "How do you keep the bugs off?" I have simply to say that a liberal use of cold water on the foliage I found kept off all so-called "bugs," which with the amateur is a generic name for moths, caterpillars, aphis, mildew and every other malady that the rose is heir to.

ZEPHYRANTHES ROSEA.

The zephyr lily, a native of Mexico, has long, narrow, drooping leaves of a dark green color. The roots, small conical shaped bulbs, which during the summer months frequently throw out a delicate rose-pink flower somewhat larger than the mammoth crocus. The flowers develop on long stems and keep for several days when cut. Bulbs should be planted in May, after danger of frost, five inches apart. They accommodate themselves to almost any soil which has a good drainage. They flower continuously during the whole summer, and when planted in small beds one is always sure to find blossoms there.

The flowers when cut retain their beauty several days, their delicate color and graceful habit rendering them very attractive when massed in large bowls or vases, as well as for their use in designs. They can be used to good advantage as a border, or massed in a lawn where the rosy pink flowers contrast beautifully with a velvety green lawn. Their easy cultivation, habit of free blooming and freedom from injury by drought should recommend their general cultivation.

The plants remain green until killed by frost, but should be lifted and dried before, as they are very tender in this respect. The bulbs should be dug and dried without removing the leaves, for if the leaves are removed it has a tendency to weaken them. They can be stored like gladioli in a frost-proof location. There is a variety with a white flower which, while very pretty, fails to attract as does the pink variety. C. M. H.

HOUSE OF ASTERS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph taken last summer of a house of asters at the establishment of the Anchorage Rose Co., Anchorage, Ky. Replying to an inquiry as to his method of handling this aster crop, Mr. Charles Rayner, the manager, writes:

"From the seed boxes in which the seed was sown in April we pricked the asters direct into the solid beds where they were to remain. Continuous cultivation and a somewhat heavy mulching of half rotted leaves, abundance of water and a little bone, the latter once a week, was all we found necessary for the success ultimately attained.

"The plants were grown in one of our violet houses, which was erected some nine years ago of inch pipe, the house being 14 feet wide and 100 feet long. An inch pipe was bolted midway to the rafter pipes and upon these swing the sash. The sash are movable and are placed in piles each summer, which enables us to plant our asters with all the advantages of outdoor grown stock and with the additional protection afforded by the position and facilities for watering. We have found this style of construction for violet houses answers the purpose admirably, being very durable, cheap to erect and absolutely water tight."

BUSINESS METHODS FOR BUSY FLORISTS.

In this series of articles which it is proposed to publish from time to time the writer will endeavor to point out the way to correctly keep account of, not only small establishments where the proprietor may be manager, grower, fireman, bookkeeper and salesman, but will also offer practical suggestions to larger establishments where scores of people are kept busy in the allied florist, nursery and seed lines. He will not set down any rigid rules to follow but rather offer suggestions, leaving the practical application of them to each individual person or concern as their own wants may demand.

Be methodical and systematic in everything you do. Do not attempt anything unless you have a good reason for doing it. If I were to teach a son the road to success in mercantile pursuits I would start with system for the basis of my teaching and end with system as the finishing touch to a commercial education.

The greatest enterprises of modern times are dependent upon strict systematic methods for their success. Rigid scrutiny of income and expense, careful analysis of each separate line of expense and constant attention to details lie behind and are most important factors of success in every great business undertaking. The great railroad systems of to-day, the mammoth jobbing institutions, the multitudinous manufacturing industries, the great shipping interests, the mammoth department stores, are shining examples of systematic methods in the business world. Some one has tersely written "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty." I would go further and say, Eternal vigilance paves the way to all success in life. I believe that three-fourths of the failures of business men are due to unsystematic methods of doing business.

Nowhere—I am sorry to record it—is the lack of system more apparent than in the florist business. No line of business is conducted on such slip-shod methods. This is not so much the fault of the florists as of the business. The rush of business at certain seasons almost prevents a careful systematic record of business being kept. Then so many men do all their own work, everything comes and goes into one pocket that to stop and record every transaction seems like a waste of time, when customers are waiting or more important business should be attended to.

To all such objections and objectors I would say if you start right there will be no time lost in keeping right and being systematic. In short you will always know where you are at. You need not be an expert accountant, you need not be a book-keeper in the common acceptance of the term, but you should be a record keeper and any man who can sell goods and make change can keep a record.

Your profit in business is your income less your expenses. But how few really know what their income is, or just what their expenses are. If your income is too small, be prepared to know how you can increase it, what line of stock to discard and what to plant more of if you are a grower, or what line of goods to handle or discard if you are a retailer. On the other hand if your expenses are too large be prepared to dissect your expense account and curtail some items if necessary. There is no satisfaction in doing business at a loss even when you can tell to a certainty where the loss occurs. There is infinitely less when you "can't see" why it occurs. How often we hear business men say: "I can't see why I didn't do better last year." If such men conducted their business on systematic methods they would see and know why at least once in 12 months. If in the articles which follow we can assist a few to see and know why we shall feel repaid for the effort. System.

THE EASTER TRADE.

Late Reports.

Topeka, Kans.—James Hayes says Easter trade was very good. Saturday's snow storm hurt business to some extent but not seriously. He found blooming plants a better sale than cut flowers.

Raleigh, N. C.—H. Steinmetz reports Easter trade as fully 25 per cent. better than last year, violets, lily of the valley and Beauties leading among cut flowers. Not many pot plants called for. A decline in lilies.

Augusta, Me.—G. P. Sanborn reports Easter trade for Augusta as probably safely one-third larger than last year. A heavy rain on Saturday cut off a good many sales, but the orders in hand were above the average.

Davenport, Ia.—Otto Klingbeil reports Easter trade as excellent and increasing every year. Stock was plentiful and sold at good prices. The weather was favorable, making delivery very easy. All the florists seem to be satisfied with this year's Easter business.

Needham, Mass.—Denys Zirngiebel says the market for plants and cut flowers is in Boston and Needmam's trade is of no consequence. Trade was fair, but on Sunday, on account of stormy weather there was a slump in all lines. More violets were sold than anything else.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—J. F. Wilcox says Easter trade was fully up to that of last year. The demand for lilies and other blooming plants was much heavier and there was not enough to supply the demand. In our retail trade the people wanted blooming plants in preference to cut flowers.

Ogdensburg, N. Y.—Mrs. Thomas Lawrence reports Easter trade as very good. Cut flowers about the same as last year, roses and carnations selling well. Plant trade was 50 per cent. better than last year, the usual stock of bulbous plants, cinerarias, azaleas, Rambler roses, hydrangeas, etc., in small and medium sizes, selling best.

Elgin, Ill.—B. O'Neil says the volume of Easter trade was somewhat smaller than last year. He says the retail trade cannot sell cheaper than the wholesale price and the wholesale price was like the horse trader's price. When flowers are sold at a reasonable price the people will buy them.

Helena, Mont.—The State Nursery Co. report Easter business as ahead of that of a year ago. Pot plants were in good demand and bulb stuff sold well. As usual at such seasons there were not enough cut flowers to fully supply the extra demand. Small pot plants for Sunday schools were extensively used and business on the whole was entirely satisfactory.

Winona, Minn.—John Wunder reports Easter trade as more than 25 per cent. larger than any previous year. There were more calls for plants than for flowers. The weather was fine and springlike and everyone wanted to take a plant home. Easter lilies were a failure here and the demand could not be supplied. There were more calls for carnations than for roses. Roses sold at $1.00 a dozen and carnations at 60 cents a dozen.

Terre Haute, Ind.—John G. Heinl & Co. report Easter trade as the best they ever had, notwithstanding the bad weather before Easter and the cold on Sunday. In cut flowers, roses and carnations are the old reliables. Next came lilacs and bulb stock. Baskets of plants tied with ribbon and arrangements of matting also sold well.

Dayton, O.—H. H. Ritter says Easter trade was all that could be expected. Everything good in cut flowers and pot plants sold out and good prices were obtained. Lilies and all seasonable flowers were in good supply. The weather was fine on Saturday but on Sunday snow, hail, thunder and lightning made it the worst day of the year.

Petoskey, Mich.—S. J. Long says his Easter trade far exceeded that of any previous Easter. Carnations, lilies and violets sold well. Also fern pans filled with fine greens and paper and ribbon trimmed, and violet pans trimmed up. Roses were not in it. He contemplates tearing down and rebuilding part of his plant and replacing old boiler with a new one.

Auburn, N. Y.—Geo. Dobbs & Son say Easter trade was a great deal better than last year in cut flowers, carnations being the favorite. As to the plant trade they are unable to say definitely as they are mainly in cut flowers, but from what they saw they doubt if it was as good as last year. But taking it altogether they think all will say it was a very prosperous Easter.

Pawtucket, R. I.—James Hockey reports Easter trade as never better. It was first rate in every branch. Pot plants sold well. There was also a heavy demand for violets and pinks. Stock about equal to demand. In some cases sister cities were called upon. Prices were good all around. Monday morning found empty greenhouses and stores and the florists with bright faces.

New Orleans, La.—U. J. Virgin reports Easter trade as 15 per cent better than last year. Harrisii sold out and could have sold a few hundred more. Roses had the same call as usual. Carnations were a glut and there were few calls. American Beauties were about a fair average. No call for palms or ferns and few calls for azaleas and spiræas. Harrisii plants sold out.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Wm. Clark says Easter trade opened strong during the first of the week and held up well till Friday when this city had the heaviest snow of the season, which lasted over part of Saturday and put a damper on trade, orders from the mountain towns being greatly reduced. Stock was of the finest with a good supply of Harrisii, spiræas, hydrangeas, hyacinths, etc., as well as cut flowers which were on hand in great abundance. This is usually the case when a snow storm is due.

Savannah, Ga.—A. C. Oelschig reports Easter trade as the best this city ever had. Every one of the florists sold out clean and at good prices. Any white flowering plant (the only color we can sell in our city for Easter) went well. The continuous cold weather and earliness of Easter made outside flowers scarce and the church members had to come to the poor florists for their decorations, for which they generally received payment in prayer.

Pittsfield, Mass.—John White says that good bright weather Saturday and Sunday helped the Easter business greatly. Carnations were in great demand and the supply insufficient. Pot lilies sold well, and in fact any well grown stuff could be sold at good prices. Business in general was much better than last year, the amount of money spent being a quarter more than last year.

Fremont, Neb.—C. H. Green reports the Easter just past as the most satisfactory he ever experienced. Prices were good, people had money and were willing to let go of it. He had an abundance of A 1 stock of his own production and every order was filled and every customer pleased. The total sales ran about 25 per cent. ahead of last year in money value. The only shortage was in Easter lilies, but an abundance of good callas in bloom helped out so that there was enough to go around. Fancy carnations sold a little better than anything else.

Wichita, Kans.—W. H. Culp & Co. say that an inquiry among the florists shows a satisfactory Easter trade at about the same prices as last year, with sales in most cases 10 to 30 per cent. larger. Supply about equal to demand but most report cut flowers sold out clean. Lily plants sold out and not enough for demand. Owing to disease and slow stock many of these missed Easter, though Culp & Co. had a fine lot just right for the holiday. Other blooming plants sold well. Bulb stock was in fine shape and sold fairly well. In cut flowers, roses, carnations, lilies and valley were most in demand with bulb stuff going mostly into assorted box orders.

Youngstown, O.—Walker & McLean say: "In comparison with last season our Easter trade this year was about 25 per cent. better. Prices were about the same as last year. But we noticed a decided increase in the demand for plants, especially lilies; next in demand were hydrangeas, Ramblers, azaleas, pan hyacinths and tulips, rhododendrons, lilacs, pot narcissus, tulips, hyacinths, cinerarias, spireas, genistas and bougainvilleas. There was very good sale for large lilies in pans with from 20 to 35 flowers each. In cut flowers, carnations were in greatest demand, followed by violets, lilies, Maids, Brides, Am. Beauty, different varieties of narcissus, tulips, valley, etc. With us it was decidedly a plant Easter, and we were fortunate in having everything just right."

Bangor, Me.—Adam Sekenger reports trade for Easter week as immense, being fully 50 per cent. larger than for the same week of 1901. Lilies sold at 25 cents a bloom and all the good stock was sold out clean. He sold 2,500 pots, with 4 to 9 blooms to a pot, Easter week. Saturday it rained and there was a lot of poor lilies left. He did not advance the price on cut flowers and sold out, but some of the dealers who tried for fancy prices on roses and pinks had some stock left. For potted stuff, such as azaleas, heaths, Crimson Ramblers, spiræas, tulips, etc., the demand was immense and they brought prices ranging from $1.00 to $3.00. In our section it is getting to be an Easter week instead of Easter day. All the churches decorated finely. On the whole it was the best Easter we ever had in this section. The violet was the only thing that called for a high price. Bunches of 25 brought a dollar.

MORE TROPICAL REMINISCENCES.

To be secluded within a boiler, hammering plugs into a leaky tube, is something like filling back teeth for a hippopotamus. Tommy only had about six inches to swing his hammer, and, being attired something like a Cuban roustabout before Gen. Wood's sumptuary law went into force, he was not soothed by an application of hot candle grease shed over him by the fireman in a too enthusiastic effort to light up the interior of the boiler.

When he finally emerged, very wet and rusty, uttering unseemly but appropriate remarks, Jaggs observed mildly that a man who could only express his feelings in one language, and that Whitechapel, must feel a bit cramped in the florist business. "Though I did once know an indigo man," he continued reminiscently, that evening, "leastways he got mixed up a bit in the Zanzibar slave trade, as used to swear most shockingly in thirteen languages, but he never used nothink but English when he felt emphatic. Seems like it was the only genuine."

Davy gave an indignant snort and turned his attention to a much-worn manual of botany which dwelt perpetually in the baggy pocket of his working coat. "Zanzibar," he said, in a tone of withering scorn. "No doubt ye went there as a missionary."

"Not exactly," said Jaggs; "more like an advance agent. Not as it was Zanzibar I started out for; I was aiming for Singapore, only I changed off."

"Like that chap from Texas as got appointed United States consul at Cayenne," said Tommy. "He couldn't find Cayenne on the map, nor nowheres else, except in a pepper box, so he started running the consul shop at Curacoa; he said that was hot stuff all right and he reckoned it was near enough."

"Speakin' o' missionaries," said Jaggs, "reminds me o' one singular incident as happened on that trip. We'd a missionary on board—a nice chap, but terrible short sighted. Well, one evenin' he was strollin' along casually, and afore anyone could stop him he walks right overboard! The water was swarmin' with sharks, and o' course that there unfortunate sky pilot was swallowed like an oyster, prayer book and all! Well, the next day was Sunday, and all day a big shark kept swimmin' 'round the ship—seemed like he had somethink on his mind. By and by all hands was piped to church, and as soon as ever he hear the first hymn that there shark lay on top o' the water, lookin' as pious as you ever see a shark look. He shook his head once or twice when the old man was tryin' to put up a sermon, but when we sing another hymn he lay there on top o' the water keepin' time with his tail, and he fairly smiled at the last amen! It shows as even sharks is open to elevatin' influences, and I believe if they was fed reg'lar on missionaries they'd soon be as mild and peaceable as a commission florist."

"It shows," remarked Tommy, thoughtfully, "as even a shark can't keep a good man down."

There was a lengthy but unquiet pause. Patches, the fox terrier who belonged to the boss' daughter when he was good and to the greenhouses when he was not (which was about eight days a week), was protesting vociferously against the expansionist policy of the parrot, who had grabbed a favorite and well-ripened bone. Polly tucked the bone away on a rafter, and, looking down at the excited Patches, remarked, "Nice doggy," in a patronizing tone. Patches relieved his feelings by making a rush at the greenhouse cat, and it was several minutes before peace and quiet were restored by banishing the injured terrier.

"Did you read about that fellow in Chicago that was raising mushrooms on loaves of stale rye bread?" asked the fireman, looking up from his paper. "I reckon that ought to have been Jaggs."

"It's a wonder," observed Jaggs, thoughtfully, "that one o' these inventive chaps hasn't started mushroom spawn in a pickle factory and raised bottle catsup. When there's such a heap o' things happenin' every day, it does seem to me as them newspaper yarns is a waste o' the raw material. Talkin' about mushrooms reminds me o' somethink as 'appened to me once—not as it's anythink out o' the way. I reckon you remember me tellin' you somethink about Celebes that time I was botanizin' there?"

"That time you run against an orchid with hose attachment, wasn't it?" inquired the fireman.

"That's so—Hydrophyllus Jaggsii, it orter been named," responded the discoverer, modestly; "only a deservin' chap never does get his rights, or them botanic gardens would have to put up an annex to hold the rare specimens as was named after James Algernon Jaggs. Well, as I was sayin', I was huntin' orchids in the Celebes—and, by the way, there was a whole push o' cannibals as wanted me to stay with 'em and be king, only I didn't fancy the job. Well, them bloomin' cannibals wasn't pleased—seemed to think as I hadn't no right to decline the nomination, and did their little best to make me change my mind; I've got some o' the marks yet. Me and Johnson thought as it might save hard feelin's if we lit out unbeknown, without wishin' 'em goodbye; we thought they was gettin a bit too pressin' when they trussed us up with coir rope and bamboo. Still, we may have misunderstood 'em; perhaps it was only their way o' tellin' us as they'd like to get better acquainted."

"I s'pose tyin' it down is the best way to get acquainted with anythink slippery." observed Tommy, thoughtfully. "Who was Johnson—another scientific chap?"

"He'd been workin' in Java for some oil company, locatin' petroleum—said his 'ome was somewheres in Nova Scotia, but I reckon he 'ain't 'ad a reg'lar postoffice address for ten years. Used to 'andle dynamite like it was Mrs. Winslow's soothin' syrup—it was precious handy to blow snags out o' the river on our way up the stream, but I always tell Johnson as that there stuff 'ud give us a surprise some day, and it did. As I was sayin', our coffee-colored friends put us in cold storage while they started in to loot the boats. I don't mind ownin' as I felt a bit pale; you see, there's no pleasure in seein' the cook hustle around to get dinner ready when a chap knows he's to have a star part in the bill o' fare. I always felt that if any o' them bloomin' savages tries to eat me, I'd jolly well disagree with 'em both before and after takin'.

"Well, them savages started to pick out a few relishes to serve on the side. I don't know just what 'appened, but I see a few acres o' tropical landscape sailin' through the air along o' Bronx Park Zoo, and it come unto my mind, as they was tryin' to open Johnson's dynamite cartridges with a can opener. When we came to, me and Johnson was a mile or two down the river. Some o' the native population was joining us, too, but they was very miscellaneous; in fact, they was chiefly souvenirs."

"And what became o' the cannibals?" asked the fireman with deep interest.

"Well, Johnny, it struck me as they was up in the air," returned Jaggs, thoughtfully. "Fact is, me and Johnson didn't go back to inquire; he was shy a couple o' fingers, and a few o' my ribs didn't seem to be in their usual latitude, but we both thought we'd just as soon be somewhere else, and we hiked along to the coast. Poor Johnson, he said as them bloomin' niggers always was careless when they started messin' around with explosives."

"What become o' Johnson?" asked Tommy.

Jaggs shook his head and paused to load his pipe; then, whistling for Patches, stepped out of the potting shed with the air of one oppressed by sad memories.

NEW YORK.

The week following Easter is always retrospective, with memories of weeks of anxiety, days and nights of unceasing labor, fears of losses through over-buying or unpropitious weather and the final thirty-six hours without rest or sleep. It is no wonder so many feel the tension, almost to the verge of nervous prostration, and when it's all over declare they wish there never would come another Easter. But then comes the awakening to new ambitions and the delightful experience of counting up the profits, a restful and soul-inspiring occasion that dissipates the clouds and makes life worth living after all. Such is the Easter of 1902, for every establishment, wholesale and retail, it seems to me, in this great city.

This week's business has been correspondingly dull; the weather unseasonable, several days cold and rainy; stock of all kinds abundant and prices low. In a word, one-half the rates of the last few weeks prevail; the quoting of figures seems unnecessary. Violets, the best, are about the only flower maintaining the old values; roses and carnations are abundant; lilies are down to $6 per 100; orchids are growing scarce; gardenias are down to 10 cents; bulbous stock, sweet peas and mignonette, too numerous to mention. The day of the sidewalk merchant has dawned and the persistency of the foreign element is a nuisance so great that one cannot but commend the restrictive system adopted in your own city and wish for its counterpart here.

The Liberty rose is asserting its right to be called a good shipper, Mr. Alex. McConnell sending some of this variety to England. Sending roses to his native land is becoming a habit with this gentleman. He has sent many a box of Beauties over the herring pond.

Robert Simpson, of Clifton, N. Y., delivered his lecture on roses last Saturday before the Lenox Horticultural Society.

On Wednesday of this week the Horticultural Society of New York holds its regular meeting at the American Institute rooms when Prof. Fernow, of Cornell, will discourse on the "Difficulties attending the introduction of forestry methods in the United States." Competitive flower shows in the N. Y. Botanical Garden will be held at the meetings in May and June.

Carl Jurgens, of Newport, and S. Goldring, of Albany, were recent visitors.

The announcement of the club meeting of the N. Y. F. C. was premature in our last. It will occur next Monday. The afternoon will be devoted to bowling. The scores made of late by the New York experts seem monotonously near 200, but they are correct. It looks as though New York would carry off about all the prizes if present evidences of skill are a criterion.

The suit of Rudolph Asmus against the Peerless Rubber Co. for damage resulting from soot settling on his glass from the chimneys of the company, was on trial last week in the Hudson county court, Jersey City. Many prominent members of the trade were called to give evidence as to the damage sustained. The defense attempted to show no responsibility on the part of the defendant company.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cold, rainy weather following Easter (fortunate indeed that it did not precede that great church festival) has kept the supply of cut flowers down, so that it has but slightly exceeded the demand. Business was excellent throughout Easter week and this week opened well both locally and outside the city.

The chief event, florally speaking, was the annual convening of city councils on Monday, when an immense quantity of bouquets, baskets and blooming plants were gathered together within City Hall, turning the council chamber into a vast flower garden. This occasion proved a boom to the Beauty market, which without such strong support would certainly have broken badly.

The special grade of this rose is coming in so freely that the price has fallen as low as $3 a dozen on some days. Of course long Beauties at $3 are a sacrifice, and $5 is nearer the average price. Tea roses are good and hold up pretty well; $8 to $12 is asked, pink being more plentiful than white. Carnations bring $1.50 to $3 per 100 with Prosperity a leading fancy at $5 to $8. Violets are getting scarcer and bring more money than they often did in winter. Good singles have gone as high as 50 cents a hundred, and doubles 75 cents and $1. Sweet peas are good and plentiful at 60 to 75 cents per 100. Valley is in brisk demand, lilies are not. Daffodils have fallen on the street from 6 cents to 3 cents a dozen! Smilax is the scarcest article on the list.

Notes.

Edward Reid is receiving from 5,000 to 8,000 fine sweet peas daily.

Eugene Bernheimer is offering fine well colored Jacqs with good foliage.

H. E. Ford told the Florists' Club that steel pipe is today better than iron pipe, the latter having greatly deteriorated.

The Conard & Jones Co. have an interesting novelty in the climbing rose Clothilde Soupert, which they believe will make a worthy mate for their improved Rambler.

A friend of the Germantown Horticultural Society has offered a special prize for the best 12 American Beauty roses, stems not over 3 feet long, to be shown next Monday evening, April 14, at Association Hall. A cordial invitation is extended to you all to be present.

H. Weber & Son, Oakland, Md., are shipping some fine Prosperity to Samuel S. Pennock.

Frankford.

It is a relief in these days of specialists with their acres of palms, of roses, or of carnations, to turn to a good old fashioned place where pretty much everything is grown, especially when they are well grown. Such places are only possible in favored spots nowadays—oases in the desert, so to speak, in the heart of a growing town or at the gates of a cemetery.

Such a place is that of Julius Koehler & Son, Bridge street, Frankford, where plants and cut flowers are grown, firstly for the wholesale city trade, secondly for the local retail trade, and thirdly for a cemetery opposite. With three arrows in their quiver they are bound to hit the mark. Roses do well, the teas on benches appeared freer than in solid beds. Carnations were thought less profitable, though producing good flowers. Sweet peas and mignonette are each given part of a house; they look well. Heliotrope in large pots is fine. A great many lilies and hydrangeas were grown for Easter, also some spiræa. Azaleas were thought to take up too much room. Only a few of a dwarf variety being flowered. A good many bulbs are forced, but they are not considered as profitable as formerly. The rest of the place contains a great variety of miscellaneous plants suitable for giving a variety in cut flowers or in planting beds or baskets.

The Review's photographs of some of the Philadelphia shops at Easter last week were much appreciated. Phil.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There is a large supply of all kinds of stock except violets, and the demand is light for everything except these and white carnations. The supply of roses is, in fact, somewhat unwieldy and on Teas $6 is practically the top figure, such a few extras reaching $7 that they are hardly worth mentioning. Good stock sells at $4 to $5 and the lower grades are jobbed off at most any old price. A clean up sale of 10,000 roses last Saturday was made at the rate of $6 a thousand. The best Beauties are held at $3 a dozen, and from that down to 25 cents for poor shorts. That there are weak spots in the Beauty market is evidenced by the fact that very good Beauties are being retailed by some of the Greeks at $3.

In carnations, good commons sell at $1 to $1.25; selects, at $1.50 to $2; fancy at $2.50 to $3, and a very few specials reach $4. Poor Tidals and Scotts and similar stock are classed as weeds and don't count. Carnations, though, seem to be suffering less than roses. Each spring as carnations get down to the point where they can be retailed at 25 cents a dozen or less, the public takes hold.

There are piles of callas in the market and they find few purchasers. At the same time there are not many Harrisii or longiflorum to be seen, though there is a sufficiency for the demand. There are none too many good violets and first-class ones bring $1. It looks as though a good many violet houses had been cleaned out after the Easter crop was gathered. Bulbous flowers must have been well cut out for Easter, for there are not many in the market now, which is fortunate.

Shipping demand keeps up very well under the circumstances and conditions are very satisfactory for the season. Not once this season have we had any of the fearful gluts that were characteristic of former years, and present conditions are the nearest approach to them. Local demand, however, is light, and even the large call for stock incident to the seating of the new city council last Monday night made no great impression on the market, though it was certainly a great help.

Various Items.

The entertainment and ball of the Florists' Club last Tuesday evening was a most enjoyable affair. The entertainment program included several numbers by the Armour's Mandolin Corps, character impersonations by Harry Brown, recitation by Hugh Wood, club swinging by Miss Enders, violin solos by Miss Lauf, song, dance and dialogue by Hoerschler Brothers and singing and dancing by the very young Miss Lund. At the conclusion of the entertainment the prizes won in the bowling tournament were presented to the winners by Mr. Sanders. The floor was then cleared and the grand march was led by the ever youthful Mr. Sanders and one of his granddaughters. The music was excellent, the floor in fine condition, and the whirl of the light fantastic was kept up till a late hour.

Mr. L. Collins has leased the greenhouses now conducted by Edwin Eagle at Seventieth street and Adams avenue, near Jackson Park, and will take possession May 1. The houses will be thoroughly overhauled and put in good shape for growing stock for a retail business.

Mr. C. L. Washburn left Monday for North Carolina, where Mrs. Washburn has been staying for some time past. He will remain two weeks.

Mrs. Horton is back at her desk at Bassett & Washburn's, after a two weeks illness.

Mr. J. A. Budlong and his bicycle got sandwiched in between a wagon and an automobile last Monday. The bicycle had the breath knocked out of it, but J. A. B. came up smiling.

Bowling.

Last Friday the Florists were up against the strong Madison team and lost three games in spite of some good scores. Following are the scores:

Jos. Foerster	176	169	185

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for March 30–April 5.

The melancholy facts of the case are that the rainy Saturday preceding Easter Sunday interfered with trade of that period more than I had time to ascertain before writing in season for last week's issue, and stock thus carried over bothered this week's product; but surely the retailers did a heavier business this past week than is usual for a week following a holiday and no one has any right to complain under all the circumstances.

Producers of red roses got hit the hardest, for two reasons. First, on account of better keeping qualities of their goods those left over from last week (and there were many) were more in the way this week and, again, there is an awful heavy crop of all kinds of them now coming in. American Beauties, Brunners, Liberties, Meteors, Helen Gould and Jacks seem to be striving to see which will arrive in greatest numbers. With New York's assistance the Beauty leads in numbers so far and a large number of them are of a large size. Jacqueminots are becoming quite plentiful and are very good, indeed, especially some of those from Elliott's houses, which beat anything I ever saw in their line.

Good white pinks are not very plentiful, but colored ones have gradually become quite so. Violets are good property, best ones bringing 75 cents per 100 and will probably go higher soon. Brides and Maids are of course plentiful and lilies never more so.

All kinds of bulb material shortening up and prices lengthening accordingly.

Events.

It is rumored that one or more messengers from one of the wholesale houses, no one seems to know which, knocked over a woman in their haste to reach a certain train in the North Station with a large box of flowers on Easter Saturday, and inflicted such injuries that she has since died. The only result so far is that no one is now allowed to go through the waiting room or to the train with such boxes, but must come with them in season to enter them properly at the express office, which will make quite a difference in shipping facilities.

J. J. McCormack is bound to be always at the front. He always leads and sometimes where few will care to follow. Too long ago to cause worriment now he came into the Park street market one night to use the 'phone, casually spoke of not feeling very well, then went home and had one of the most cunning little cases of smallpox on record. It was such a ladylike little case that he is neither pitied nor pitted.

W. H. Elliott, in concurrence with the old adage that "Nothing succeeds like success," has engaged the services of the talented manager of the Exeter Rose Conservatories, Mr. Robert Miller, to grow American Beauty roses in his mammoth new New Hampshire plant. No one else ever approached his success with that variety in New England and it looks like a good move on both sides. The transfer of services takes place immediately. Another case of being faithful in a few things and made master over many.

Boston daily papers make much capital over the last meeting of the Horticultural Society, when a vote was taken upon the much-mooted question of a new constitution for the organization which should give more power to fewer members. Each step in progress was fought tooth and nail, and the two-thirds majority necessary to install the new document could not be found. J. S. MANTER.

ST. LOUIS.

Trade since Easter has been very good and everybody seems busy with some kind of work. Quite a number of weddings the past week kept the florists who were fortunate enough to have the large ones, very busy and lots of stock of all kinds was used up. At one of these weddings the flowers used were entirely tulips and they made a pretty effect. A few large weddings are on tap for this and next week; these with the M. D. graduation exercises will keep some of us busy again for this week.

Stock the past week was one day plentiful and the next scarce, still in the second grades stock is quite plentiful; good firsts in roses are scarce. The wholesalers report that shipping trade is still good and quite a number of orders have been received for stock of all kinds since Easter. A few changes in quotations were noted the past week and the best Meteors, Brides, Maids and Gates are sold from $5 to $6; seconds from $2 to $4. Beauties are improving somewhat in quality; firsts are still scarce at $3 and $4 per doz.; $2 for seconds and 60 cents for the short ones.

Carnations have also come down in price; the best can now be had for $3; the bulk go at $2 and some as low as $1.50. The demand is still large for all colors though white has the greatest call, and of course, is always scarce when needed the most. The quality of stock that comes in is good, especially the fancy.

There is still a big lot of bulbous stuff coming in; Dutch hyacinths, valley, Romans, daffodils and tulips are not much looked for just now and the price is still low. Harrisiis are more plentiful and have a good call at present at $12.50, but callas seem slow. Narcissus poeticus will no doubt be in this week from the south. Sweet peas are a little slow yet but will be more plentiful next week. Violets are becoming scarce and will soon be a thing of the past. All kinds of green are selling well.

At Union market all the plant stands are doing a rushing business. Sanders, Schray and Young & Sons make a fine display of all kinds of blooming plants and report that trade is very satisfactory.

The nurserymen all report a fine business in fruit, shade and ornamental trees; also hardy shrubs of all kinds.

The seedsmen report that their trade in grass seed has been large; better than last year, and from now on they will be busy with flower and vegetable seed trade.

Everett Guy and H. S. Halstedt of Belleville were in town last week. Both report a big Easter trade with them and say the others were all satisfied with their trade.

Wm. Bouche, the landscape gardener, has the contract for laying out the grounds of the new country residence of Mrs. Grace Van Studdiford, the famous opera singer, which is situated a little west of the World's Fair grounds. The cost of laying out this place will be several hundred dollars.

Should certain things come to a head next week St. Louis will have the biggest flower show ever held in the west, and the entire Exposition building, including the large coliseum, which is considered the largest building of its kind in the west, will be used and the prizes will be the largest ever offered, and no grower of any importance will be able to resist the temptation of showing what he's got in St. Louis. Those who are back of this say St. Louis cannot afford to be outdone by a small place like Kansas City.

Bowling.

The bowlers were to have had a meeting on Monday night at the Grand Alleys, but through some misunderstanding only a few showed up. A meeting will be called for next Monday night at the Planters' Hotel Alleys at 8 o'clock sharp, and all those who have the welfare of the club at heart will please attend so the summer series of games can be started and make these our home alleys. A list of prizes will be made up at this meeting. This will be the only notice bowlers will receive of this meeting.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Notwithstanding the fact that usually after a holiday business is inclined to be rather slow, the past week has proved to be the exception to the rule, and business was highly satisfactory. There was no surplus of stock of any kind and carnations as usual were very scarce. The weather resembled March more than April, it being cold and windy, but toward the latter part of the week it improved greatly, the leaves on lilac bushes, etc., being well along at present.

All of the stores sold out well for Easter and the general stocking up that was necessary on Monday gave trade its start. Also there were numerous funeral orders, well divided among the trade, consequently the demand for white flowers was the greater. White carnations were the scarcest flowers, with white roses also short.

In the flower market Easter was one of the largest markets for many years. The weather was favorable and thousands of people visited the place. The crowd was so great that many people were unable to make what purchases they wished, as being wedged into the crowd so firmly they were unable to stop where they chose, so were glad to get out alive. Following Easter there were few cut flowers to be seen on the stands, but thousands of bedding plants were selling well.

Prices on stock during the past week ran about as follows: Roses, best stock, $6 to $8; medium stock, $4 to $5; ordinary grades, $2 to $3. There was some very good stock to be had and prices held up well to figures quoted. The supply of Meteors and Maids is increasing both in number and in quality. Good fancy carnations brought $4; medium fancy, $3; ordinary stock, standard varieties, $2; some few bursted (many varieties are still bursting, but not so bad as just before Easter) go at $1.50. Violets are stacking up and 25c to 75c was all that could be obtained, and by far the majority went at the former figure. Violets have been rather a disappointment in this market all the season. Single varieties at all times sold best, Princess of Wales taking the lead. Double ones at most times were a drug and could be moved only by reducing the price.

Bulbous stock sold very well, especially in white, owing to scarcity of roses and carnations and the numerous funeral orders. Harrisii and Calla Lilies went slow, the former at $1.50, the latter $1 to $1.25 per dozen. Smilax is getting a trifle scarce; 15c is realized easily for good stock.

Various Items.

During the heavy wind which occurred in the early part of last week many panes of glass were broken in the greenhouses of B. P. Critchell, and the wind entering through these open spaces tore many ventilators off, causing much damage in broken glass.

Richard Witterstatter's carnation plants were in full crop for Easter and Dick reports the largest cut ever known for a holiday at his place. As most of these were Enquirer, it not only speaks a good word for Enquirer, but brought in a very nice revenue.

Mr. John Evans, the ventilator man, was a caller. C. J. Ohmer.

IN FLORIDA.

On my return from the land of the orange, pine, rose, jasmine, etc., (too numerous to mention, to say nothing of the "gator,") will say that though I had planned to call on various members of the craft I was called home before I expected to return and most of the intended calls had to be omitted.

I had several very enjoyable visits with Mr. L. P. Bosanquet, of Fruitland Park, Fla., who has a very pretty place and who with his wife takes great pleasure in showing you around and cutting the choicest for your benefit. While he has a nice collection of roses, bamboos, etc., bulbs are his specialty and he plans to grow on contract tropical plants and bulbs. He ought to be very successful, as he has the facilities and I know he will use his utmost endeavor to give satisfaction.

In Jacksonville one finds "Mills the florist," equal to all occasions, with a nice stock of flowers and plants. He has the reputation of being a hustler and it must be a great satisfaction to him to be so well spoken of. In fact I heard his work praised in Fernandina when they found out I was also in the business.

The Mallory line of steamers is certainly deserving of the patronage they receive, their boats being thoroughly seaworthy, their officers most capable and all their accommodations first class. And they do not allow them to be crowded. We had a delightful voyage and charming weather. R. E. Shuphelt.

Chatham, N. Y.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

A few days following Easter there was a temporary lull in business, then it opened up again brisk and steady, shipping being particularly active. Many are off crop just now and with them flowers are, of course, scarce, and those who are in crop have no more than will equal their individual demand. Prices remain firm, the quality of stock good, and no flowers are going to waste unless it be lilies, of which there is a good supply from plants that missed Easter. Bulb stock is over and violets are played out, though a few good Campbells are still to be seen. Prices: Roses, $1 per doz.; extra choice, $1.50; carnations, 35 to 50 cents per doz.; lilies, $1.50 per doz.

G. F. C.

Atlanta, Ga.—John A. Lambert & Co. report Easter trade as very good. Lilies were scarce. Roses went well, but quality was off. Carnations good and sold freely at good prices. The large demand for funeral work just at Easter caused a shortage in white. Baskets and made-up work went a little slow.

BEGONIA GLOIRE DE LORRAINE.

Mr. Charles Blick, who has been very successful with this begonia, says in a communication to the English Gardeners' Magazine:

"It is sometimes said that this begonia does not do well from leaf cuttings, but our plants were raised from leaves put in about the middle of March, 1901. As soon as well rooted the young plants were placed in large 60-sized pots and grown steadily on in these until the first week in June, when they were shifted into six-inch pots, in which they were flowered. The compost used consisted of one part peat, one part loam, and one of rotten manure and sand.

"As soon as re-established the batch was transferred to cold frames, and the growths pinched to induce branching. Here the plants remained until the last week in August, when they were taken into the greenhouse and kept in a temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees. The growths were neatly staked out and tied as this became necessary. During the period of active growth liquid manure, composed of one-half ounce of nitrate of potash, and one-half ounce of phosphate of potash dissolved in one gallon of water, was given twice a week."

Morris, Ill.—Mr. A. B. Hull has purchased the greenhouses and business of the Morris Floral Co., and the business will be continued as the Hull Floral Co., with A. B. Hull, president and manager, and R. M. Hull, secretary and treasurer. Geo. Heath will remain in charge of the greenhouses. The shipping trade established by the Morris Floral Co. will be continued.

Winfield, Kan.—M. E. Eddy has sold out here and has removed to Kansas City. The greenhouse will not be run by the present purchaser.

DENVER, COLO.

Spring seems to have set in in good earnest, but we had very bad weather Friday and Saturday before Easter, which hurt the Easter trade, especially in plants. There never were so many fine plants for that occasion in Denver before and if it had not been for the weather everyone would have been pretty well sold out. As it was there were quite a lot of plants left over. But in cut flowers the supply and demand were just about even, with the exception of bulbous stock, of which large quantities were grown, much more than the demand. Good demand for Beauties and not enough. There were not so many baskets of plants put up this year as last. Roses at $1.50 to $4 sold well. Lilies brought 35c per flower. Violets were fine and sold well. Take it on the whole the florists were well satisfied with their Easter trade.

N. A. Benson is well under way with his new place of 20,000 feet of glass. The Florist Club had a surprise in the way of twenty-five blooms of Mrs. Potter Palmer carnations, with stems 28 to 30 inches long. They were the finest scarlet that we have seen out here. They were sent by the Chicago Carnation Co. and attracted much admiration among the members. THORNE.

MILWAUKEE.

It is remarkable how well business has kept up since Easter. Stock of all kinds sold well during the past week and appearances point to a good spring, with plenty of stock.

Holton & Hunkel Co. handled an immense quantity of stock during Easter week. They report the best Easter they have ever had, with sales fully 25 per cent better than former years.

Heitman & Baerman were in full crop for Easter, sending in large quantities of carnations of a select grade. They will erect six new houses this spring.

F. P. Dilger sent in the most bulbous flowers that have ever been sent to a wholesale house here. He will erect two new houses this summer.

Several shipments of flowers for Montana were on a stalled train, consequently did not arrive until four days after Easter. F. H.

OTTAWA, ONT.

The Easter trade here is described as very good with supply equal to demand, and as a general thing of an entirely satisfactory quality. The only drawback to trade was the weather, which on the all important Saturday before Easter was far from offering ideal conditions for the disposal of flowers and plants. There was a steady downpour of rain from early morning until night.

Easter Sunday was fine, however, allowing the decorations of the churches, etc., to appear to more advantage than would have been possible under the conditions that prevailed Saturday. A .O. L.

KENOSHA, WIS.—Lewis Turner has sold his greenhouses to Henry B. Camp. There is about 25,000 square feet of glass devoted to cut flowers and plant stock for a general business. KANSAS CITY, MO.

The grand rush is over with, and after making a tour of the retail stores and interviewing the proprietors, everybody is apparently well satisfied with their Easter trade. Judging from the enormous sale of plants a year ago Easter preparations were made this year to supply a greater demand. We must not fail to give the grower due credit, as all blooming plants with the exception of some lilies which were a trifle small and diseased were brought into flower at the right time and in good selling condition.

On Thursday, the 27th, the public had an opportunity to view the finest Easter display ever seen in Kansas City. The lily again proved its popularity and sold best. Saturday evening there were no good plants left unsold.

In cut flowers there was plenty for all purposes with the exception of American Beauties. Home grown stock was excellent and none had been in the pickle. Carnations retailed at from 75 cents to $1.50 per doz.; roses from $1 to $3 per doz.; Beauties from $3 to 15 per doz.; violets, $2 per hundred. Bulbous stock had to be pushed hard even at 60 cents per doz.

Sam Murray and his able assistants had more business than they could attend to. We noticed among his large collection of plants some fine rhododendrons and metrosideros, which took well with his patrons.

The Rock-Heite Co., who built greenhouses here last summer, grew enough plants to fill Mr. Rock's large Walnut street store and a good-sized annex. Both places were most artistically arranged and not overdone with frills and ribbons.

Arthur Newell, at Twelfth and Baltimore, says he bought more heavily than a year ago, and sold out clean. He caters to a good out-of-town trade, which is increasing every year.

In choice cut flowers none were better supplied than Albert Barbe, and all of his own production. The Golden Gate rose and some of the latest varieties of carnations which have done so well with him were in full crop for the Easter trade.

While material was plentiful and returns averaged as good as a year ago, yet we would have been able to report a large increase had the weather been pleasant and if the department stores had not cut loose. On Saturday it snowed heavily all day and during the night the mercury dropped below the freezing point. Sunday was cold and the wind blew a regular March gale.

The department stores advertised many thousands of cheap flowers and did an immense business. Carnations were offered at 25 cents per doz., and valley at the same price. One florist remarked that these cheap sales do not affect the local trade, but the majority take a different view of it.

One leading house announced the giving away of so many flowers as an Easter offering for every $1 purchase of dry goods, and we learned from a reliable source that they bought $400 worth.

OLD TIME CARNATIONS.

I read with interest the paper by Mr. A. F. J. Baur on the national carnation exhibition, and having just picked up an early "American Flower Garden Directory," by Robert Buist, noted especially the reference to size and stems of carnations "ten" years ago. How about "seventy" years ago? Buist speaks of them that far back with three-inch flowers and strong, straight stems thirty and forty inches high. Did the ancients outgrow us in carnations, I am wondering?

OCEANIC, N. J.

The fifth annual ball of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society was given Friday evening, April 4, in Red Men's Hall, Oceanic, N. J. Eighty-two couples were in the grand march and the upper "twenty-five" of Oceanic and surroundings were represented. The boys had a grand old time as usual and when Home Sweet Home was played the sun was rising in the east, and even then the boys found it hard to part.

B.

We have received from Mr. G. F. Plowman, Iron Mountain, Mich., blooms of a pelargonium sport that occurred with him and it seems like a very desirable acquisition. The individual flowers are of good size, semi-double, and a very bright and pleasing combination of white and carmine.

Columbia, S. C.—The Becker Co. is starting in business here and has some nice landscape work to do. They are building a greenhouse 26x80 which will be finished by the time spring trade opens.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

At the meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society, held March 27, the resolutions of incorporation were adopted. Schedules for the fourth annual exhibition, to be held Nov. 11 to 13, next were distributed. It was decided to offer a silver medal for the best decorative plant not yet in commerce. Cooke & McCord offered a special prize of $25, which was thankfully accepted..

Alex. E. Hogg exhibited mixed carnations, Sunset, Golden Gate and American Beauty roses, which were awarded honorable mention.

The following were elected to honorary membership: Dr. F. E. Russell, John E. White, Charles Millard, John Gross, D. C. Belnap, John Hennessay, Fred E. Weeks, Joseph M. Ledwith, Irving DeRevere, W. A. H. Ely, Alfred Barth, of Mount Vernon. Nominations—Edward Cosgrove, James Ballantyne, Henry Harms, of Irvington.

An essay on rose culture under glass was read by Percy Whitney and discussed by those present. A vote of thanks was given the essayist.

It was decided to call the regular meetings at 7 o'clock the year around.

H. J. Rayner, Cor. Sec'y.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

Easter trade in this neck of woods was something tremendous. We cleaned up everything worth talking about; did not have enough left to make a ten cent buttonhole bouquet. Cut flowers, roses and carnations sold better than plants, though we disposed of a few callas, hyacinths, primulas, etc., Saturday. Demand for plants, however, was nothing compared to demand for cut flowers. Roses retailed at $1.25 to $1.50 per doz.; American Beauties, $6 to $8 per doz., according to quality; carnations, 75 cents to $1 per doz.

Saturday before Easter the weather was cloudy with some rain but it was not too cold to handle the delivery of flowers with safety, for which all the florists were duly thankful. Saturday night we had a terrible storm of thunder and lightning during which a large Catholic church was struck by lightning and totally destroyed. The congregation had made a very elaborate preparation for celebrating Easter in the way of decorations of flowers, plants, etc., all of which went up in fire and smoke. Loss, $75,000 to $100,000 on building and contents; insurance, $10,000. Do not think anyone can complain of the Easter business done in this city.

J. H. W.

OIL CITY, PA.

W. M. Deyoe & Co. were well equipped to take care of their Easter trade, which was a record-breaker. Their roses and carnations were in fine crop and bulbous stock never looked better. Mr. Smith, formerly with Randolph & McClements, of Pittsburg, is now in the employ of W. M. Deyoe & Co. Ground has been cleared and the five additional carnation houses will be built in the early spring.

ROSES AND LADIES.

A subscriber sends us an old newspaper clipping containing the story of the German florist who lost patience with his lady customers. He says it was clipped from a paper dated about 20 years ago. It is so old that it may now be new to some. Here it is:

"I have so much drouble mit de ladies ven dey come to buy mine roses; dey vants him hardy; dey vants him donbles, dey vants him fragrant; dey vants him nice gouler, dey vants him everydings in one rose. I hopes I am not vot you calls one uncallant man, but I have somedimes to say to dot ladies, 'Madame, I never often see ladies dat vas beautiful, dat vas rich, dat vas good temper, dat vas young, dat vas clever, dat vas perfection in one ladies. I see her much not.'"

HAMILTON, ONT.—At the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club April 1 there was a warm debate on the subject of secrecy in commercial horticulture. It was a very interesting session. At the next meeting there will be a talk on ornamental shrubs. It is expected that the exhibition to be given during the C. H. A. convention will be held in the Armory, which will give an abundance of floor space.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Madsen & Christensen, formerly of Westport, Conn., have leased the Bidwell Bros. greenhouses on Bidwell Ave., this city.

GRATIOT, O.—W. B. Longstreth reports that his seed trade was 50 per cent better this year than last up to the present time.

CARTHAGE, MO.—P. Finn has just finished erecting a house, 22x64, and will soon build another 30x75. He reports Easter trade as very satisfactory.

RIPENING THE GROWTHS OF EXOTIC PLANTS.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the proper maturation of growth made during the spring and summer months by many of the beautiful exotic plants cultivated under glass. The huge specimens we see at the principal exhibitions are usually crowded with flowers, and such results could not possibly be obtained unless strict attention were paid to ripening the growth during the late summer months. A system of gradually withholding water at the roots, combined with a dry atmosphere and a sunny position, should be adopted. Such subjects as bougainvilleas, clerodendrons, allamandas, dipladenias, rhyncospermums, some orchids and many other subjects should receive attention while the sun has power to assist us in this particular.

Extremes must be avoided, always bearing in mind that plant life must go to rest gradually. In gardens where the plants mentioned are extensively grown a house can ofttimes be devoted to them at the end of summer, and, where possible, this is recommended, for the simple reason that all may be treated alike and that nothing else will suffer in consequence. Full sunlight, accompanied with all the air possible, should be given, and the atmosphere be kept dry. As the foliage decays, so must the amount of water applied to the roots be diminished, until only just sufficient is given to prevent the wood from shriveling. Many growers place their specimens in the open; this system is not to be recommended, except in cases where the heavy autumnal rains can be carried off, by means of a temporary roof.

One of the best flowered specimens of Stephanotis floribunda I remember stood in the full sun in the middle of the month of August and throughout September, and it was a perfect sheet of flowers when exhibited the following year. A close study of the various plants is, of course, necessary, as some require more drastic treatment than others.—H. T. Martin, in Gardeners' Magazine.

Florence, Pa.—T. G. Arnold, the florist, planted some very effective beds last season at Rock Springs, Chester, W. Va., and has the contract again this year. One large bed to be planted this year will be 42 feet long and 22 feet wide, and will be planted with cannas, Queen Charlotte, Egandale, Chas. Henderson and Papa, Salvia Bonfire, small caladiums, red and yellow coleus, red iresine and alternantheras in four colors.

Belvidere, Ill.—The J. W. Lyons Co. are adding a new house 40x120. The John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, is supplying the material.

Lawrence, Kans.—Whitcomb & Son report Easter trade as good. They were short on lilies. Plants sold well. Not enough cut flowers to supply demand.

Please stop adv. Have sold out. Many thanks to the Review.—T. C. Breece, West Berlin, O.

The Florists' Manual by William Scott

Is a book of 224 pages, and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

BUTTE, MONT.

Easter trade in Butte was excellent. Cut flowers were cleaned up all around. About the only thing left was some geranium plants and they were used more for display than as stock to be sold. At the leading stores prices per dozen were as follows: Beauties, $5 to $10; teas, $2 to $4; carnations, $1.00 to $1.50; valley, $1.00 to $1.50; Romans and daffodils, 75 cents; tulips, 75 cents to $1.00; Harrisii, $5.00.

The plant trade was large. The Butte Floral Co. chartered freight cars to bring their plants from their greenhouses at Gregson Springs and they were all cleaned up. Spiræas in 5-inch pots sold at $1.00 to $1.50 each, and in 6-inch, fine plants at $2.00 and $2.50 each. They also had some novelties, which sold well. In cut flowers they sold 15,000 violets, the largest display of this flower ever seen here.

Law Bros. and the State Nursery were in doubt for a while Saturday, as their stock from the east was delayed but finally arrived all right.

Saturday opened here with the thermometer at 10 above zero and every plant had to be wrapped very carefully. The most of the plants sold were lilies, spiræas and genistas.

The largest funeral this section has ever known took place here March 26th. The flowers furnished by the Butte Floral Co. alone amounted to $1,135.00. They made a casket cover which contained 40,000 violets, 1,000 valley and 200 Harrisii. It was arranged by Mr. O. A. C. Oehmler and was the handsomest floral piece ever seen here. Among other designs Law Bros. made up a very handsome four-foot cross of violets. And there were bunches, wreaths, panels, crescents and other designs too numerous to mention.

Mr. Wm. Hendrickson is now in charge of the B. F. Co.'s plant at Gregson. Mr. Seitz is now with Law Bros.

A. C. Wilhelm, formerly with the J. M. Gasser Co., Cleveland, is now with the Butte Floral Co. and is making a fine showing. RAMBLER.

LONDON, ONT.

Favorable weather, an abundance of stock, and the prosperity of the times were all sure indications of a large increase of business at Easter. Nor have the signs failed, for we are able to report an increase of over 40 per cent. over the corresponding week last year. Lilies were not over plentiful and were all cleaned up early in the day at higher prices than they have heretofore brought, selling wholesale at 15 cents and retail at 20 to 25 cents. Immense quantities of bulb stuff, spiræas, azaleas, etc., were disposed of at good prices. Cut flowers, too, found ready sale with supply about equal to demand. With the exception of carnations, prices ruled about the same as last year. There was no demand for made-up baskets or pieces of any kind. Lilies, spiræas and palms were in demand for church decorating, all the churches doing more or less.

Gammage & Sons did a large shipping business and report an increase in demand for well grown pelargoniums of which they had a good supply.

The London Horticultural Society made its spring distribution of bulbs and seeds last week. The society has decided to hold a spring show, dates to be announced later. LOND.

EVERY FLORIST OUGHT TO INSURE HIS GLASS AGAINST HAIL
For Particulars Address
JOHN G. ESLER, Secretary, SADDLE RIVER, N. J.

OSWEGO, N. Y.

Easter trade was excellent, and is increasing every year, especially in the demand for blooming plants; bulb stuff sold well. In cut flowers, carnations had first call with roses next, and then violets. Harrisii lilies were hard to sell owing to the reports which got abroad to the effect that they were scarce and consequently high priced. And really, their appearance was anything but enticing. Even the best plants, which were fine, tall and sturdy, apparently having no trace of the old disease, bore flowers deformed in every way. Only about one-fourth of the lilies grown by all the florists here were salable.

There seems to be three classes of buyers with us: The young man who buys cut flowers for his girl and a boutonniere for himself; moneyed people (comparatively few), who want an azalea or something of that cost, and the large majority, who want a plant in bloom, and the less they have to pay for it the better. This is usually bought for a gift and you are requested to deliver it whether it costs ten cents or a dollar, so it is just as well that the florists have no small priced plants at such times. W. D. S.

RICHMOND, VA.

The Easter trade this year was the record-breaker, particularly on cut material. Fully several thousand dollars' worth or more of any kind of stuff could have been sold, but all was practically gone at six o'clock p. m. Violets were in greatest demand and about 150,000 were sold, all told. Easter lilies were a little scarce, likewise hyacinths. Like last year potted stuff would have dragged some but cut flowers running out, potted plants were taken instead and made a cleaner sweep. The trade generally was all right.

The old name of Harvey has been taken down after half a century. The business is entirely closed out, taken piecemeal by Mann & Brown, Hammond and Whitty.

M. M. Etry has sold out to Mrs. Lafferty.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The florists in this section report an exceptionally good Easter trade. The stores in this city were kept open until a late hour in the morning.

Mr. Charles Cooper had on exhibition at his store a very fine lot of Brunners.

Mr. Wm. Hathaway's store was a bower. A large bank of fine blooming plants extended along the whole east side of the store, and contained 1,500 lilies, 75 lilacs, 300 Crimson Ramblers, 300 geraniums and a lot of spiræas. On the counter were thousands of pinks, violets, etc., all of which were sold before noon Easter Sunday.

Mr. Robert Newsham has accepted a position with Harry Baker, Campello, Mass.

Mr. Louis Stone, of Avon, is intending to start up his house soon. C. W. G.

MECHANICSBURG, PA.—Mr. H. Groenbeck has purchased the greenhouses he has had in charge on East Main street, and has also bought a lot of ground on the corner of Walnut and Locust streets, where he will soon establish his greenhouses.

Largest and Finest Stock of CHRYSANTHEMUMS in the country. Also 200,000 Young Rose Plants in best possible shape.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A Little of Everything.

It's good to visit the market, not necessarily as a buyer, but always the keen observer. Just at present many things can be bought cheaply, but it's a bad bargain, that can only produce regrets. "Look ahead" is the most important motto in life, particularly demanded in the florist's business. Many florists consider the season over immediately after Easter. It should be remembered that flowers bloom all the year around and people cannot shut out death.

About boarding plants—well, there's nothing in it for you. No matter the circumstance, better decline to perpetuate smallness in human nature and half life in plants. Both are most injurious to trade. Dignity, with honesty behind it, may suffer at times, but it commands respect and always wins out. Therefore, don't crawl in or out of business. Stand up.

Good-sized privet planted in boxes makes the quickest and cheapest screen for hotels, restaurants, roof gardens and general outdoor work. It has taken the place of ivy (which was too slow). Privet is also becoming a favorite as specimens in tubs in lieu of bay trees, which are too expensive for many people. Newly imported bay trees are to be had. If you intend handling any, might just as well get them early as late. One or two specimens will add beauty to your place, and you need never worry about material for a funeral or presentation wreath whilst bay leaves are available. When, figuratively speaking, you have to put them in the soup, it's because you pay too much for them.

Deutzia Lemoinei proved to be the best paying forced shrub this season. All growers might do well to note this one hint. But here's another: Don't expect too much for it. A great many of the plants offered for sale are in too large pots. It's a mistake. The right size, the right price, gentlemen. Apropos of the annual tale of woe, tall Kentias will be sky-high in price only next season; far more so than ever before. European growers are already looking for the American "millionaire" florists. Think it would pay us to annex Holland and Belgium and give up the sugar and rice swamps of the Philippines. "There's millions in it."

A vast amount of the seeds sold in retail florists' stores are absolutely useless, and cannot be made to germinate by the most expert. Those who care anything for reputation and the future of seed or plant trade should be careful to avoid doing worse than robbing the people. If you sell seeds, get them from a reliable house and don't offer them for 1 or even 5 cents a package. Leave that to the fakirs. You could not sell a withered flower and should not sell dead seeds.

There are thousands of florists who do a nice local trade. This is the season when most should make a special display of early herbaceous plants—roses, shrubs and trees of all kinds. They cost very little, and who can tell what the smallest sale may lead to.

Good ivies are and will be valuable this season. Thousands will shortly be needed, and variegated vincas will soon be sought. Whilst any florist might do well to speculate in a large or small degree in pansies, but few of the stores can make geraniums pay at this early date. Many growers, of course, rush anything off when it shows a bloom, but the retailer cannot always make a market. They must often sit down and cultivate patience. Leave tender bedding plants where they are till the frost and snows have surely gone. Nasturtiums were popular last summer, and they will be so the coming one. Nothing prettier for the summer breakfast table, and they can cover a disreputable fence.

One prominent New York florist sells quite a few forsythias planted in tubs and forced to come into flower the end of March or first of April. He says they cost little, and many people appreciate them in conservatories or hallways.

Those who have the chance to sell roses for outdoor planting should not forget to recommend a few hybrid teas, for when roses are most looked for—that is, in July and August—the hybrid perpetuals have gone with the June crowd. What if the teas are not hardy at the North Pole? Anything of beauty deserves protection. But in this case very little is required in most sections. Don't narrow down to Jacques. Every florist should be an expansionist.

Large white chrysanthemums were shown in a Broadway window last week. Don't know whether the grower wanted a dollar each for them or not; but am inclined to think it was unkind to scare the wholesalers with the white ghosts in mid-April. There's a time for even a joke.

How to decorate a large table in five minutes. This can be solved by sawing off a large azalea close to the branches, stick in a low bowl or flat basket of moss, tie down some of the branches and fill round with light greens. That had to be done in many an emergency, and it often looked better than a studiedly made design.

A nice group of hydrangeas can be made to look well in your window, and a vase of Beauty roses close by will not detract. You need large flowers betimes to make a show to be seen by the business man who runs and the lady who rides. Neither carry microscopes.

Camellias were brought out of oblivion somewhat the past or present season, and we were glad to assist in the good work. Scarcity made them a novelty, and, no matter the color, they could be used most profitably. For gentlemen's or ladies' wear it is necessary to double-wire them, for the camellia is a fickle flower. It will last indefinitely, though, if wired. We used some to great advantage at a critical party, where something exclusive was desired. White for men's coats; pink, red or white for ladies' headdress. They are not oversuitable for bunches or corsages. One of them is good taste; two is like superfluous company.

This is a particular time, when every florist's counter or table should be adorned by a vase or two of spring flowers. There are hundreds of cases where a bunch of 12 or 25 flowers can be sold instead of six if the bunches are tied right and you offer them by the bunch and not by the dozen or singly. It is always best to sell spring flowers by the bunch, and you can afford, if necessary, to cut the price on 25 flowers because there's always a loss of time, if not of actual money, when bunches are broken. Of course, if your customer wants only the few, it is never wise to refuse; but there are cases where the bunch would be taken were it offered in the right way.

There are so many varieties of carnations nowadays that the list at times is bewildering. They are all very good, but don't forget there is a demand for cut flowers during the summer. Carnations and roses are wanted all the year round. Ulrich Brunner roses deserve closer acquaintance and a more general and higher cultivation. Dogwood (Cornus florida) or the pink variety is anxiously awaited by those who wanted something good for window or wedding decoration. Where, oh, where is the lovely single pink bouvardia of the early days? If you know how to grow it, do your best on a bench or a successive house of it for next season. It paid well, and can be made to do so again. Roses, roses and carnations may all be beautiful, but they are often also monotonous. Almost anything is welcome as a change.

Somebody missed Easter with a fine lot of Lilium candidum, but they are welcome now, and are particularly good for weddings, church, funeral work or are fine with a few choice roses in any vase or box or basket. Haven't seen so many callas on the New York market for many years. They are a good flower for those who sell many funeral flowers, as they keep long and can be used up in almost any design. There is a great swarm of Harrisiis and longiflorums coming in. Bronze leucothoe sprays are good to use among your green when tying up flat bunches. The color adds much to your work. White Dutch hyacinths are popular as a sweet-scented cut flower with many critical folks, and they are good for funeral work. So are stocks.

In most cases it is easier for you, and there is more profit in designs made of mixed flowers; but there is mostly always more meaning and beauty about the design composed of one variety of flower. The most expensive and most difficult funeral design you can make can be the casket cover, but up-to-date methods and materials have rendered even this easy compared to the architectural structures of former days. Wired toothpicks may be good for the novice, but the flower and wire go on together now, and if the pick is too long cut them in bunches before you start.

Green-painted bamboo stakes are on the market, and put to shame the old dirty sticks. Growers should know that even a decent-looking stake can add value to their plants.

Bougainvillea can be used at wedding decorations, and looks very beautiful on a mirror with a mass of white lilacs near by; but it should not be put near or in the room where the ceremony takes place, because of its color—sometimes its odor. The prie-dieu can be made a very pretty part of the wedding decoration, but keep all flowers with thorns away from it. (Thorns will come later on life's way.) Needn't rush around to borrow a prie-dieu. You can rig up one with a little wood or a cheap bench. Cover with white silk and put a spray of flowers and cluster of ribbon on top rail.

Jasmine and red roses—what can be finer? And there's many a wall in a greenhouse covered with a much less profitable flower. Yes, grow a little jasmine gracillimum or any of its types. It will pay.

Many very fine effects can be produced by using a background of cloth, that will bring out the full beauty of the flower you use. For instance, turquoise blue and pink go well together; so do crimson and deep yellow.

When making hand bouquets please give a thought as to the size and strength of those who have to carry them. Be humane.

Last week the types put "variety" where "vanity" should be. IVERA.

CARNATION NOTES.

We are having some weather just now that is extremely hard on our carnations. The sun has gained enough strength to make it quite uncomfortable under the glass on very bright days, and in addition to this we are treated daily to a strong, dry wind, which takes the moisture off the soil like a drying oven, and so we are, as it were, "between the devil and the deep sea." In order to keep out the drying wind we dare not raise the ventilators to their full height, and by keeping them down we raise the temperature to an uncomfortable degree.

This condition of affairs causes a good many growers to begin to shade their houses, and although it does bring temporary relief, we are not in favor of shading this early except in a few cases, and then only very lightly. For instance, such varieties as Lawson, Jubilee and nearly all the light pink varieties are badly bleached by the sun unless a light shade is put on the glass, or, what is better still, a curtain of mosquito bar hung over the bench; you want just enough to break the force of the sun. A heavy shade at this time will cause your plants to grow soft and weak, and by the first of June they will be ready to throw out.

The carnations are making a very rapid growth now, and you want to keep them as solid as you can by giving plenty of air and light. If the houses dry out too rapidly you can dampen the walks and under the benches right after noon, which will help a good deal to keep the plants fresh. Give plenty of water at the roots, but do not imagine that you can stop the wilting by keeping the roots more moist than usual. A plant that is kept on the dry side right along will not wilt so quickly as one that has had plenty of water and made a quick, soft growth.

Don't let a few mild nights cause you to become careless with the firing and perhaps turn off the fireman altogether. There will be many nights yet when a little steam will greatly benefit your carnations, and you should be prepared to give it to them. Whatever you do, don't close the ventilators about 5 o'clock in order to trap a little warmth from the sun and then let the house run down to 45 degrees by morning. An occasional drop to 45 degrees will do no serious harm if it is not too sudden, and if it does not follow an unnatural rise to 70 degrees at the beginning of the night. Whenever you intend to have no fire you should have an inch or two of air on the houses, as this will keep the air circulating and dry, even if the temperature does drop a little low. On damp, rainy nights you should, of course, keep steam around, even if the ventilators have to be kept up. A. F. J. BAUR.

FEEDING CARNATIONS.

Please tell me how to use liquid cow manure or liquid sheep manure in feeding carnations. How often would you advise using slaked lime or wood ashes? I merely pepper it over the soil every two or three weeks. Is that too often?

I have a great many split flowers right along. My man had them too wet for a while. I took hold of them and kept them on the dry side for four or five weeks, until I thought they needed watering, which I then gave them. And still they split. Do you think I am overfeeding them with liquid manure or lime or wood ashes? Or would they split from being kept too dry?

PITTSBURG FLORIST.

There are many things that may have caused your carnations to split their calyxes, and in your case it may have been brought about through a combination of mistakes. Keeping them too wet might cause a few to split and keeping them too dry is just a trifle worse. I am inclined to believe that it was brought about either by overfeeding during dark weather or by irregular temperature. We do very little feeding with liquid at any time, and we would not think of feeding our carnations liquid during December, January and the first half of February, unless the plants were suffering for want of food. The first thing you should have done would have been to discontinue the feeding, and the next thing to watch your temperature very closely. The lime and wood ashes did no harm applied as you say in your letter. My advice to you would be to discontinue the liquid feeding altogether, but give plenty of clear water and keep up a regular temperature about 4 degrees higher than usual, and I think your trouble will disappear. If the soil seems exhausted give a light mulch of well-rotted manure.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

This is the season when young roses in pots require the greatest care to keep them in a vigorous growing condition, and to protect them from the ravages of insect and other pests, and ward off diseases to which they are liable. To keep them vigorous and healthy they must never be allowed to become pot-bound, especially now that the days are getting warmer. The foliage on pot-bound plants soon loses the rich, healthy green color, however carefully they may be attended to, and if allowed to stand for any length of time it is hard to get them back to health again.

By reason of the foliage lying so near the pots it is difficult to reach green fly by fumigation; frequent applications will, therefore, be necessary to keep them in check. Keeping plenty of tobacco stems packed under the benches of the stock house does away with the necessity of fumigating altogether. Spider is also difficult to reach, for the same reason, and it is only by steady persistence with the syringe that this pest can be controlled.

Another enemy which we have to contend with at this season is mildew. Keeping the stock hardy by judicious ventilation is the best preventive. Dusting the leaves with flowers of sulphur once or twice a week on bright days also helps to keep it in check. If it does make an appearance, painting the pipes with a mixture of air-slaked lime and sulphur of equal proportions of the consistency of paint and closing the ventilators tight for two hours during the coldest part of the night will soon banish it. If young Beauties or Liberties are allowed to get crowded on the bench they are very apt to get a dose of black spot. To prevent this the surest method is to give plenty of room, pick off decaying and diseased leaves, give plenty of ventilation and keep an even temperature of 56 degrees at night, and they will soon grow out of it. RIBES.

MANURE FOR ROSE SOIL.

I want to plant my rose house this spring and have no well-rotted cow manure. Can I use sheep manure, and how much to a square yard of soil? Also, how much bone meal? H. A.

Sheep manure being much stronger than cow or horse manure, must be used with caution in rose culture. Have frequently seen it used, and have tried it myself, the results in most cases being far from satisfactory. One load of sheep manure to twenty of loamy sod is about as strong as it can be used with safety.

Where well-decomposed cow or horse manure is not obtainable, manure made during the past winter is the best and safest substitute. To ordinary loamy sod one load of such manure to four of sod will make it rich enough. Piled together and left for three weeks before being chopped up and then turned over at intervals of ten days will put it into good condition by planting time. To such a compost three pounds of dessicated bone meal to each cubic yard will be ample. RIBES.

DUTCH HYACINTHS.

Replying to W. S., there are several reasons for hyacinths "lifting" their blooms, or, as we call it in Holland, "spitting their bloom." Sometimes it is due to the bulbs having had a very heavy bloom the year before, which has brought about a weakness in the bulb. Again, it depends a good deal upon the soil the bulbs were grown in the year before. Sometimes a very light sandy soil will produce the most "spitters" or "lifters." Still another reason is growing the bulbs on too fast. After the little bulbs are taken from the old one it takes about five, and sometimes six, years to grow them to full size. But sometimes the Holland growers, by giving them the best soil and culture, bring them to full marketable size in three or four years. These quickly advanced bulbs bring many disappointments the following year. As you say, it is apparently not the fault of the bulbs, as they are as sound as any, and they make the finest-looking bulbs.

The best thing to do is to save the bulbs that have lifted their flower spikes, as they make the best bloomers the following year. Take them out of the greenhouse and plant them out in some loose soil till August. Then dig them and allow them to lay exposed to the air in the shade for two hours. Then place them close together and cover with some loose soil, leaving them there for about ten days. Then it is time to take them in and keep them in a dry, shady place until time to plant again in the fall.

Some varieties are much more subject to this trouble than others. Those most liable to it are Grand Vainceur, Mina, Mme. Van der Hoop, Leonidas and a few others, though other varieties are troubled more or less.

JACKSON PARK, CHICAGO.

This view of part of Jackson Park, Chicago, the site of the World's Fair, presents a decided change from four years ago, for at that time all of the planting material shown was in its infancy. Hardly any of the plants were then over two years old. Over 300,000 young trees and shrubs were propagated and raised in the South Park nurseries and planted in Jackson Park since the World's Fair, and many of these are now fine specimens.

In the foreground of the picture, running along Stony Island avenue, the entire length of Jackson Park, are two rows of Carolina poplars, now about eight inches in diameter. These are perhaps the finest lines of Carolina poplars in the United States, if not in the world. All have been kept carefully pruned and are beautiful and symmetrical in form. Anyone visiting Jackson Park would be glad to have his attention called to these two rows of trees. All the new planting was done under the superintendency of Mr. Fred Kanst.

The large building in the distance, now the Field Museum, was the Art Building during the fair, and the smaller building at the extreme right, now a refectory, was the German building. These are all of the World's Fair buildings still standing.

VIOLETS.

Wherever you have to fill in plants from the field take care to lift them with all the roots possible, handle as little as possible and plant with as large a ball of earth as will remain without tearing the roots. Only take up a few at a time, so as to have them wilt as little as you can; take care not to break leaves and stems, and give one good soaking at once; then water sparingly until they again take hold of soil. Give them plenty of air without a strong draft and shade lightly from the sun in the middle of the day, if you have been unable to strike two or three cloudy, cool, dry days for this operation.

Now, supposing you have grown your violets successfully and have got a nice crop on ready to pick; there are other things to take into consideration. The border or house that you expect to pick today you should not have watered yesterday, as the flowers should be dry when gathered, for any water on the blooms will not only destroy all the fragrance (and they are worthless without it), but will ruin them quickly when packed. They should be picked early in the morning, if possible, bunched as picked and the stems put in water to fill, in a cool room (not an icebox). If for wholesale, bunches of fifty each are preferred, and the flowers so arranged that the top of the bunch presents a smooth, oval surface. Let me say right here that this is very inartistic. If you have good retail customers that appreciate flowers properly arranged to show them off at their best, just persuade them to allow you to tie a bunch, taking them with the stems the natural length, making the lower ends of same even, so that the flowers stand up at different heights, with a few leaves among them besides the usual border of leaves, and I will leave it to any lady of taste and independence if it is not far ahead of the stereotyped trade bunch.

After having picked, bunched and filled the flowers with water, if they are to be shipped take them out, taking care not to wet blooms, and spread them on a cloth to drain out surplus water from between the stems to prevent wetting after packing, which would undo all of your previous care. Some markets will require that each bunch be wrapped in waxed paper; others will not. While very sweet themselves, they are very susceptible to foreign odors, and great care should be taken that they do not come into contact with other things, which would quickly contaminate them. They should be packed in new boxes, and inside of all other packing they should be surrounded by waxed paper and should also have waxed paper between them and any other flowers that may be packed in the same box. If you are sending many give them a separate box when possible.

To return to the house and growing proper, never fumigate with tobacco smoke; the liquid forms, evaporated, are far preferable; and this should always be done several days previous to picking; in fact, the proper time is just after you have picked over a house. It is also our practice to water thoroughly after picking, providing the weather permits. Of course, when the dark and cloudy days are over you will hardly ever have any trouble about this. R. E. Shuphelt.

LETTUCE FORCING.

In a number of years' experience growing lettuce in the greenhouse I have found there are two very important points often overlooked by growers, especially beginners. Both are equally important, but we will take first that of allowing the soil to become dry.

Your correspondent, J. W. N. (in your issue of April 3), is suffering from the inroads of the fungous disease Sclerotinia Libertiana, a very common one, and which has been pretty thoroughly investigated by the Hatch Experiment Station, Amherst, Mass., recorded in bulletin 69. A moment's reflection as to the habits of fungi will perhaps enable one to grasp the facts better. The common field mushroom (Agaricus campestris) needs exactly the right conditions to enable the roots or mycelium to run through the soil. The conditions are warmth and dryness, and afterwards a few rainy days, and the fruits will appear. These are the conditions which suit the "rot" or "drop fungus" (Sclerotinia Libertiana). J. W. N. has probably allowed his soil to become dry, either between crops or in the first stages of growth of the crop.

The second point to consider is that of heat. In the short, dark days of winter the temperature at night should never rise above 45 degrees, for even if this fungus is present it is never very active at a low temperature. We have at this station a solid bed used in crop rotation, which has never had the soil changed since being planted in this, the cool compartment of the greenhouse, in the fall of 1898. It is never, only for a few days at a time, without some sort of a crop, and the fertility is kept up with manure and commercial fertilizers. The crops grown are, first, chrysanthemums; second, lettuce; third, radishes and beets; fourth, cucumbers. These cover the whole year, and, of course, the soil is always in a moist condition. This year instead of beets and radishes we have grown a second crop of lettuce, which is about to mature, and not a sign of the "drop" disease to be seen.

The only disease which is ever troublesome is a burning of the tips of the leaves, upon which, if the conditions are right, the spores of Botrytis vulgaris will grow, and possibly ruin the entire plant. Weather conditions and inactivity of the roots are responsible for this. At first we imagined the plants had been kept too wet, and we had better withhold water; but this made matters worse, and we now make no change, but give plenty of water at all times. Lettuce are very thirsty plants, their broad leaves giving off immense quantities of water on bright days.

As a further proof of the inability of some fungi to grow in a cool, moist place, we have a mushroom bed upon one end of which a faucet has leaked considerable water. In this spot there is no sign of a mushroom, while in the other part of the bed, subject to the right conditions, the "buttons" are coming right along.

PIPING.

How shall I arrange the pipes in my carnation house to realize the best results? The flow and return to the house are 32 feet 1¼-inch pipe. From there it divides into four coils, each coil of 1-inch pipe, with 6 pipes hanging on bench in the walk. It does not give satisfaction. I would like to make use of the pipes and also have them under bench, out of the way. The house is 50x9½, 7 feet high in center, 3½ feet wall (2 feet in ground, leaving 1½ feet above ground). Ends are partly glass. Houses run east and west. House No. 2 is laid with 4-inch boiler flues, 2 flows and 4 returns, and this gives good satisfaction. Night temperature 60 degrees. House 50x15½ ft., 8 ft. high. Joins the dwelling house on east side. Sash bars 10 ft. to the south, the north side being of lumber, except 4 lights in the roof, each 3x5ft.

I want to add on the north side of this house a new house for growing chrysanthemums and lettuce, and probably carnations, if necessary, by dividing the house. Want to use solid beds if advisable. I have 3-inch boiler flues to heat with. How shall I place them if I have solid beds?

I have a No. 15 Hitchings corrugated boiler. Will it be large enough to heat all three houses? C. J. L.

In reply to the several inquiries of C. J. L., the difficulties with the heating of the No. 1 house, in which he uses 1-inch pipes arranged in zig-zag coils, is caused very largely by the excessive friction in these small pipes and the long travel of the water necessitated by the form of coils he uses; then, in order to make matters worse, in the No. 2 house, which is nearer the boiler, he uses 4-inch pipes for coils, thus giving the house nearest the boiler every advantage over the one furthest from the boiler, allowing the circulation to take the shortest cut and that which offers the least resistance. If it is desired to utilize the 1-inch pipes, which he has in house No. 1, he can do so by changing the form of the coils from the zig-zag to a two-tier coil, as indicated in the accompanying plan, and it would also be advisable to change the size of the main leading from the boiler from 1¼-inch to 2-inch.

Regarding the proposed No. 3 house, he does not say what width he desires to make it; therefore, I cannot advise him as to the pipe arrangement; but as he has 3-inch tubes on hand which he wishes to use, he can do so by using one line of tubes to every 34 inches of glass contained in the roof, measuring across the roof from gutter to gutter.

Regarding the capacity of the boiler, he has to heat an additional house, it has very little surplus of capacity over this present work, and he should not put on it more than 250 sq. ft. of additional glass, unless he is willing to do considerable night firing in very cold weather.

In placing the pipes in No. 3 house, if he decides to use solid beds it would be a good plan to place a flow pipe right at the eaves above the bench and bring the return back in the walk on the side of the bench.

Piping Suggested to C. J. L.

PIPING AND BOILERS.

In reply to the inquiry of P. N., the little base-burning boiler would not have capacity sufficient to heat the two carnation houses he describes. The No. 15 boiler would have more than sufficient capacity for the rose and propagating house; but even if the two boilers were connected together their combined heating capacity would be somewhat scant for the economical heating of the entire range; but if first cost is a serious consideration, they could, with some additional care and a little forcing in coldest weather, be made to heat the two houses. It would, however, be more satisfactory to discard the smaller boiler and substitute a new surface-burning boiler of larger capacity, as the base-burning boiler is not as economical in fuel as would be the surface burner.

The floor of the boiler pit should not be less than 7 feet below the floor of the greenhouses, in order to give good results. The heating pipes within the house should have a rise from the boiler end to the opposite end of not less than 4 inches. I am assuming that there is glass on the roof of these houses only, as P. N. does not show anything to indicate glass on the side walls; and if such be the case, he should use not less than 4 lines of the 4-inch pipes he has on hand in each of the carnation houses, 7 or even 8 in the rose house and 2 in the propagating house.

The chimney should have a height of not less than 16 feet above the floor level of the greenhouses; its flue should be 12 inches square, surrounded by 8 inches of brick wall.

THRIPS INJURIOUS IN GREENHOUSES.

By F. H. Chittenden,
Assistant Entomologist, U. S. Dept. Agriculture

Most florists are acquainted with "thrips," but it may not be generally known that there are several species of these little creatures which do more or less injury to plants grown under glass. The commonest and most destructive species in America are generally known under the name of onion thrips, greenhouse thrips and strawberry thrips.

All of the thrips are exceedingly minute, and the species mentioned do not, even in their largest forms—the females—exceed one-twentieth of an inch in length. They have elongate bodies, and the mature or winged forms have four very slender wings fringed with long, delicate hairs, which gives the insect the appearance shown at figure 1 a. These insects are somewhat anomalous in the manner of their feeding. Their mouthparts are both fitted for sucking and biting, on account of which they form an order by themselves, the Physopoda, intermediate between the true sucking and the biting or chewing insects.

Thrips of one or more species are to be found in most of our common flowers, and it is seldom that roses and the blossoms of clover, daisy, and various weeds are entirely free from them. They are very active little creatures, and leap and fly readily when disturbed. They vary somewhat in habits, the injurious forms being most destructive to cultivated flowers and vegetable crops, although a few do damage also to grain and grasses. Some forms may be found under the bark of trees and shrubs, while a few are said to be beneficial by feeding upon other insects.

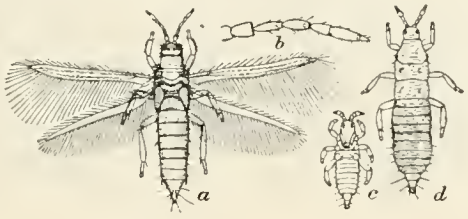

Fig. 1—Thrips tabaci: a, adult; b, antenna of same; c, young larva; d, full grown larva—enlarged (from Howard, U. S. Dept. Agriculture).

*The word thrip is sometimes used, but this is erroneous, as the form is the same for singular and plural, "thrips", in which respect this name is similar to species, sometimes incorrectly pronounced "specie" in speaking of a single form of insect. It recalls the case of the Irishman who indignantly exclaimed to his spouse that she was a disgrace to her "sek entoirely."

The term thrips is also mis-used in England and to some extent by American florists, for example, to the leaf hoppers of the grape, particularly when grow n under glass. These are entirely distinct, and belong to a different class from the true thrips.

Life history.—Owing to the numbers of species of thrips it is difficult to formulate a life history that would fit them all, and to generalize without knowing the habits of the more important groups. The following, therefore, is merely approximate.

The parent insects are usually found on the lower sides of leaves or imbedded in flowers of various kinds. In their attacks they induce the withering of the parts affected. The females cut by means of a tiny saw with which they are provided near the end of the abdomen a slit in a leaf or stem, usually, and in this deposit an egg, generally inserting it under the epidermis till concealed from view. Here the egg hatches in a few days, the young thrips working their way out and beginning to feed. They also suck the juices of plants in the same manner as the adults, and as they feed continuously their growth is rapid. In from one to two weeks, depending upon the temperature, they become full grown. They then cease feeding and seek a spot in which to transform to the final stage of the nymph, and from that stage to the adult. The entire life cycle from the time of the deposition of the eggs until the maturing of the adult has been found to be passed under the most favorable conditions, that is, in a warm atmosphere, in three weeks. Half a dozen or more generations may be produced in the artificial atmosphere of a greenhouse during a season.

THE ONION THRIPS.
(Thrips tabaci Lind.)

One of the most destructive forms in America is generally known under the name of the onion or tobacco thrips. It is not alone a pest in the conservatory, but injures a great variety of field and garden crops to which it is more destructive than to plants grown artificially. Besides onion and tobacco it affects among crop plants, garden leek, parsley, cabbage, melon, cucumber, squash, turnip, cauliflower and strawberry, while of greenhouse plants it is known to do more or less injury to nasturtium, mignonette, candytuft, four o'clock and rudbeckia. The most serious injury, however, in greenhouses appears to be to carnations and cucumbers. The damage is often great, sometimes amounting to the destruction of entire crops or plantings.

The general appearance of both sexes of this thrips, which are very similar, is shown in Fig. 1 a, highly magnified. It is pale yellow, with the thorax somewhat darker. The wings are still paler yellow, with dusky fringes and bristles. A full-grown nymph or young is shown at d, and a younger one at c.

The onion thrips is a comparatively old pest in America, as there are records of its having been injurious as early as 1857. In 1872 it attracted considerable attention in Massachusetts, injury to onions in Essex county alone being estimated at $10,000 during that year, or about one-tenth of the crop. In 1887 its occurrence in Bermuda on onions was noted, and in later years it did considerable damage to this, one of the staple crops of that island.

The earliest establishment of this species in South Russia, where it has been stated by its describer to cause much damage to tobacco, affords evidence of its being native to the Old World, and there is little doubt that it was introduced in this country from Europe, from which country it was doubtless imported either with green onion tops or on cabbage leaves which were brought ashore or perhaps thrown overboard while the ships which brought these vegetables lay in our harbors. From the point of introduction, which appears to be Massachusetts, the species has now spread, following the trunk lines of railroads more or less closely, until now it has reached the Pacific. Injury has been most severe in the north.

THE GREENHOUSE THRIPS.
(Heliothrips haemorrhoidalis Bouche.)

The species to which the name of greenhouse thrips has been given is of about the same size as the preceding, dark brown, or black in color, with the exception that the end of the abdomen is blood red, whence the scientific name. In its life economy it differs little from the onion thrips so far as is known, and is perhaps of somewhat less importance as an enemy to cultivated plants. Its principal injuries, at least in the United States, are to different species of palm, fern, azalea, rubber plant, and some other conservatory plants. It is recorded from Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Florida, and this implies a somewhat wide distribution along the Atlantic seaboard. It is more abundant in Europe, but many have been introduced from the West Indies or Central America, and, as with most imported species, it will probably increase in numbers and destructiveness with time.

THE WHEAT THRIPS.
(Thrips tritici Fitch.)

This is the most abundant of all thrips occurring in the United States. It is also the most nearly omnivorous, but, fortunately for the florist, it is not so frequently found upon plants growing under glass, and the fact that it has such a wide range of food plants is in its favor, as attack is thus distributed and only few forms of cultivated plants are as a rule severely injured. In the time of Fitch, who described this species in 1856, it was most abundant on wheat, whence the above name. The strawberry is also severely injured, and Prof. A. L. Quaintance is authority for the statement that during the years 1897 and 1898 this species reduced the yield of that fruit in Florida quite one-third. It is also called the strawberry midget or thrips, and has been reported as doing some injury to orange, cotton, apple, pear, plum, pea, parsley, endive, blackberry, dewberry and roses. In the attack upon roses it causes what is termed "blighting," the petals are chafed so that the rose soon blackens and withers. The bud may become infested as soon as it is open sufficiently for the entrance of the thrips, and in less than twenty-four hours it may be blackened so as to be worthless for market.

The male of this species measures about .03 inch, and the female between .04 and .05 inch. The species is yellow, with the thorax tinged with orange, and the antennae or feelers are ringed with a dusky color. This insect is probably indigenous to the United States, as we have no information of its occurrence abroad, and it is distributed from Canada to Florida, and westward.

THE CESTRUM THRIPS.
(Heliothrips cestri Perg.)

The present species remained unknown to science until 1895, when it was described as a new species by Mr. Th. Pergande, of this office, who is about the only person who has made observations of any importance in regard to it. He has been familiar with this thrips since 1884, when he found it attacking Cestrum nocturnum from Massachusetts. About the same time a specimen was received from Helsingfors, Finland.

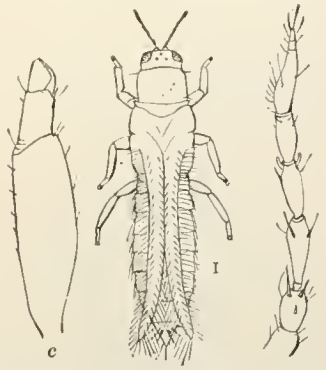

Fig. 2—Thripa tritici: a, adult thrips; b, antenna; c, leg—a, much enlarged; b and c highly magnified (from Hubbard, U. S. Dept. Agr.).

This species measures about 1.2 mm. It is dark brown or black, the end of the body is more or less distinctly reddish, the head reddish, and the eyes dark brown. The fringes are dusky, and the third joints of the antennæ are almost as long as the two following joints combined. There are other characters for its separation from the species that have been previously mentioned, but the above will suffice.

In addition to the food plant which has been mentioned, Mr. Pergande has observed this species on amaryllis, which was so attacked on the leaves that the entire surface became blistered and red as if attacked by a fungus. Richardia, ficus, aralia, gardenia, phœnix, dracæna, hydrangea, chrysanthemum, grape, cotton, and a number of weeds growing with cultivated ones were also infested.

It seems probable that this species may gradually become as troublesome in hothouses as the others that have been mentioned, as it has shown its capability of feeding on such a variety of plants. It appears to be unknown whether it is native or foreign, but it has probably been introduced from abroad.

METHODS OF CONTROL.

The habit of thrips of living deeply imbedded in the petals of delicate flowers such as rose and carnation, and in other concealed portions of plants, renders them very difficult of treatment, as they are not within the direct reach of ordinary poisons.

The standard remedies for thrips are kerosene emulsion, resin wash and tobacco. The first two kill by contact, and are effective only in proportion as they can be made to reach the insects. In case flowers are badly injured the best method consists in cutting them off and burning them with the contained insects, thus reducing their number by preventing further multiplication.

Kerosene emulsion is best applied in the form of a spray, and the kerosene soap emulsion, prepared by the addition of whale-oil or fish-oil soap, is most effective. It is made by combining two gallons of kerosene, half a pound of the soaps mentioned, or one quart of soft soap, with one gallon of water. The soap should be dissolved in boiling water and then poured while still boiling hot (away from the fire) into the kerosene. The mixture is then churned violently for about five minutes by means of a force-pump and direct-discharge nozzle throwing a strong stream by pumping the liquid back upon itself. At the end of this time the mixture will have become of the consistency of thick cream. Properly prepared an emulsion will keep indefinitely, and should be diluted only as needed for use.

For most purposes the emulsion is then diluted with about ten times the volume of water, although for some plants it may be necessary to use a weaker solution, say with from one to fifteen or twenty times as much water. To be productive of the best effects the spray should be applied before or immediately after the blossoming of the plants, and care should be taken that it is not used later, as it is apt to taint the plants with the flavor of kerosene.

The resin wash has no advantage, so far as known, to the kerosene emulsion, and is more difficult of application.

Whale-oil and other soaps are also of value, applied as sprays for these insects, and may be used at the rate of half a pound to a gallon of water. The same precautions must be observed as most of these soaps have an equally distasteful odor.

Tobacco is of great value as a fumigant, and the manner of its use in greenhouses is familiar to most florists. As with the kerosene and soap solutions previously mentioned, it cannot be profitably used when flowers are in bloom, owing to the permanency of its odor. It may be applied, however, within a week of the time that most flowers are to be cut. Like the other remedies that have been mentioned, it operates against plant-lice which may be also present, and is the standard remedy against that class of insects. It is used in various forms, but the most satisfactory manner of application is fumigation by the use of ordinary tobacco stems or waste from the factories. It is one of the simplest and cheapest methods of controlling these pests in greenhouses. It should be used upon the first appearance of the insects, since to kill them after they have accumulated in great numbers it is necessary to make the smoke so strong that injury to plants in one form or another is very apt to follow. Light fumigations at regular intervals will keep most kinds of thrips and plant-lice in subjection.

In the fumigation of tobacco several methods are in use. In the ordinary process the stems should not be over dry, but a little moist, so that they will smolder and generate a larger volume of smoke. The best time to fumigate is late in the afternoon toward dark, on a still day, to avoid wind which would drive the smoke, to some extent, outside of the buildings to be treated. The fumes are left in the houses over night that the best effects can be secured. A convenient way of fumigating is to place a few live coals upon a shovel or on sheets of iron or any similar receptacles, preferably of metal, and to lay the tobacco upon these; or, if tobacco dust can be secured cheaply, a few live lumps of hard coal can be placed on the dust, or a very hot brick or stone will answer the same purpose.

The amount to be used depends upon the strength of the tobacco, the plants to be treated, and the size of the greenhouse. Several forms of tobacco are for sale under different proprietary names, and one of the best of these is "Nikoteen." It has been used with great success by Messrs. Fernald and Hinds in greenhouses, in Massachusetts, vaporized at the rate of 20 cc. or five and one-half teaspoonfuls of Nikoteen to 750 cc., or a little more than one and a half pints of water, to 5,000 cu. ft. of greenhouse space. Used thus experimentally on cucumbers at night it did not injure the plants, while nearly all of the thrips were killed. The houses treated should always be aired early in the morning.

In vaporization of tobacco, a practice which has been in use during the last eight or nine years, and which has largely superseded fumigation in some sections, tobacco stems are placed in a kettle, metal pail or similar receptacle, the hose is connected with a steam pipe, and the nozzle is inserted in the kettle or other receptacle, and soon the house to be treated is saturated with the vapor of tobacco, with resulting destruction of thrips, plant-lice and other soft-bodied insects that may be at work. In this process the treatment is given in the early morning on a bright day, and after its completion the plants are carefully syringed and the house ventilated. A surplus of moisture is to be avoided, as it induces "spot," mildew and similar fungous diseases.

Greenhouses of the C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee.

A MILWAUKEE ESTABLISHMENT

We present in this issue views of the greenhouses of the C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, one showing the older range and the other the six houses recently added to the establishment. We also print portraits of the officers of the company, which are C. C. Pollworth, President; Joseph E. Pollworth, Secretary and Treasurer; W. A. Kennedy, Vice-President. The president of the company needs but little introduction to the trade, as he can always be found at any gathering of general interest to the trade. Vice-President W. A. Kennedy, who looks after the greenhouse interests of the company, comes of a family of gardeners, and was at one time a large contributor of roses to the New York market. Later he took charge of the McCormick greenhouses at Lake Forest, Ill., which under his direction became the principal rose-growing concern around Chicago at that time.

The company purchased the Deuster greenhouses, and last season made a large addition, the new plant being a model of its kind. They are now preparing for further additions. The growing of palms and other decorative plants is the principal feature, though much of the new addition is devoted to roses. Albert Hoge, for many years with C. B. Whitnall, is in charge of the palm department, and the appearance of the stock is proof of his ability in this line.

The company recently added a nursery department, and will devote several acres to ornamental shrubs and vines. In addition their import and supply business cover a wide range. They are represented on the road by W. B. Schuehl. W. F. Holiday manages the cut-flower department, having had over ten years' experience in this line. Many leading local growers consign their stock to the firm, as well as growers in Burlington, Freeport, Morton Grove, Lake Forest, Kenosha, Oconomowoc and other points, and its large shipping business finds a ready outlet for this stock.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in the cut-flower line was fairly good last week; most of the work was for funerals, and all kinds of white flowers had a good call. The bright, warm weather brought about the expected overproduction of roses and carnations, and Friday and Saturday roses and carnations sold for $10 per 1,000. This caused what the public called a flower war between the fakirs and two downtown stores. Fred Foster rented a large vacant store on Olive street on Saturday and sold carnations and roses at 25 cents per dozen, only to be outdone by Ellison & Tesson, next door. A few Chicago fakirs came into the war by surrounding both stores.

The quality of the stock has suffered somewhat; roses need a great deal of picking over. It is very hard to give quotations on stock, as prices keep fluctuating. The best Beauties are down to $3 per dozen; shorts from $2 to $5 per 100, with plenty of the latter on the market.

The only carnations that are in demand are white, and the other colors consequently suffer. The Chicago Carnation Co. is sending in excellent blooms. Their Prosperity seen at Kuehn's last week were grand, and Higinbotham and Palmer were of the best. None of these went to the fakirs, as they can't use them at the price they were sold.

Bulb stuff is about the same as last week in quantity and price. Narcissus poeticus is in from the south at $1 per 100; callas are not selling so well; Harrisiis have the best call. Violets are almost a thing of the past, and very few are coming in, and these are small.

The stands at Union market are still doing a rushing trade in plants of all kinds. The quality of the stock at the different stands is up to the usual standard of market stuff.

Club Meeting.

The April meeting of the Florists' Club was not well attended. President Meinhardt and Vice-President Ellis were not present and ex-President Fillmore was requested to take the chair. He opened the meeting with eleven members present. The World's Fair matters were again tabled; nothing of any importance came before the regular order of business. J. F. Ammann and R. J. Mohr read essays; the former on "Growing American Beauties," which was short and sweet and to the point; Mr. Mohr's on "Growing Sweet Peas" was more of a history than an essay. Both received the thanks of the club for their able efforts. Quite a long discussion took place as to how to bring the members out to attend the meetings, and what would interest them most. A smoker was talked of in the near future. At the May meeting this talk will be continued, and we hope that some of the stay-aways will come and give their views on this subject. Mr. Frank Fillmore decorated the president's desk with a fine, large vase of well-grown roses and carnations. We hope for a better attendance at the May meeting, which will be held on Thursday afternoon, May 8, at 3 o'clock.

Notes.

Mr. R. A. McPheron, manager of the Cottage Greenhouses, Litchfield, Ill., was a visitor last Sunday calling on the trade. In the afternoon Mr. McPheron visited the World's Fair grounds. He reads the Review each week, and says it's the best paper published.

Mayor Harrison, of Chicago, who paid St. Louis his first visit last week, came in for a number of very fine bouquets, which were sent to his hotel by friends. The Mayor visited the World's Fair site, and was much impressed with it. He said the perspective was certainly fine, and advised the directors to postpone the fair the same as Chicago did.

Miss Schafer, at Fourteenth and Montgomery streets, reports trade very satisfactory; her Easter trade was fine. But for the close competition on either side, where they try in every way to undersell her, she would do much better; but for a beginner has no complaint to make.

The beautiful weather Sunday last brought thousands to the World's Fair site to watch the moving of the large trees, which is going on night and day.

An Ivy Wreath.

The work is progressing nicely, and Mr. Kessler, the landscape gardener, has his hands full with his Kansas City workmen which he has employed.

The Engelman Botanical Club has distributed nearly 1,500 packages of seed at 10 cents each to the school children in the different parts of the city, who have entered into the competition for the diploma offered by Mayor Wells for success in flower growing. Prof. Irish, of Shaw's Garden, has been actively pushing this scheme of the children beautifying the city, and is very much surprised at the general interest taken, and has great hopes of educating the children in growing plants and vegetables of all kinds, this being the first year, and hopes to double the number in another year.

Bowling.

A special meeting of the Bowling Club was held Monday night at the Planters' Hotel alleys. Fred C. Weber was elected president and J. J. Beneke secretary and treasurer; handicap committee, Ellison and Sturtz. The club will roll each month for a prize, to be taken by the member making the highest average. Three games will be rolled every Monday night. No one can claim a prize who has not taken part in nine games out of the twelve. The handicap committee reported as follows: A. Y. Ellison, scratch; Carl Beyer, 4; C. A. Kuehn, 6; J. J. Beneke, 8; John Sturtz, 9; John Kunz, 26; C. C. Sanders, 26; Will Adels, 30; F. C. Weber, 31; John Young, Theo. Miller, F. M. Ellis, R. F. Tesson and H. Berning, 35, the limit. The bowling will be done every Monday night at the Planters' Hotel alleys, and the games will start at 8.30 sharp, handicaps to be changed each month.

The following scores were made after the meeting:

Names.	H.	1	2	3	Total.	Ave.
F. M. Ellis....	35	178	202	217	597	199
A. Y. Ellison..	5	149	248	191	588	196

Next Monday night we expect the full membership to be out and pair off in two teams. J. J. B. is still under the weather with a bad bowling arm.

SIMPLE FUNERAL DESIGNS.

After all is said the fact remains that the making up of funeral designs constitutes the backbone of the business with the majority and anything helpful in this line is always welcome. And with the largest number the elaborate complicated design is rarely called for. Aside from simple bunches the wreath, cross and similar standard forms, are still mostly called for, and often the cost must be very moderate.

But taste can be shown in these simple designs as well as in more elaborate ones, and believing that it would be helpful to any florist to see the work of any other florist we would like to reproduce photographs of everyday designs such as we present herewith, which are the work of Mr. W. E. Hearne with the Kemble Floral Co., Oskaloosa, Ia. Mr. Hearne protests that these do not show his best work. But this is not the point. They show his way of treating these subjects in his everyday work and that is what we wish to show.

We shall be glad to have photographs of similar designs arranged by you. Send in any you may have. Or have some of your arrangements photographed. You would find such photographs useful to you in many ways.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

This week has seen the first real sunshine since Easter. How we ought to appreciate that last week of wonderful weather before the great church festival. The market has been in very active condition, with local and shipping demand rather better than usual at this season. Nearly everything on the list sells well, sweet peas, which are a little scarce, being eagerly taken at as high as $1 per 100 for the best. Valley is also moving briskly at from $2 to $4, one sale of 800 being noted. Smilax has almost disappeared from view and is greatly missed. Carnations are scarcer than a week ago; they bring from $1 to $4 per 100. Roses have brought very good prices. The best Beauties from $3 to $4 per dozen; the short grades at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. These are scarce, and prove quick sellers. Good Brides and Maids bring from $8 to $10. Violets are coming in less freely. Bulbous stock has gone for the season, with the exception of Southern-grown daffodils. The American Bulb Co. (I think that is the name), of Virginia, are sending large quantities of these flowers to William J. Moore, which bring from $1 to $2 per 100.

Notes.

Edward Reid is handling some nice pansies.

This market is practically bare of orchids.

W. A. Murray, Atco, N. J., is sending some very nice carnations to S. S. Pennock.

Mrs. Charles F. Evans, formerly of Rowlandsville, near Frankford, died, and was buried in California last week. Mrs. Evans was much respected in this city, and her loss will be greatly mourned.

A Simple Cross.

Charles Meckey has 15,000 hardy roses in 4, 5 and 6-inch pots. They are grown on the place, and are exceptionally well done. His principal varieties are Jacqueminot, Magna Charta, La France, Hermosa, Clothilde Soupert, Queen's Scarlet and Crimson Rambler. He had a nice lot of Easter plants, including the dwarfish genistas seen here, which are being followed by geraniums and other spring plants.

The cool weather has been of great benefit to the nurserymen, giving them ideal transplanting conditions, of which they have taken full advantage.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society held its April meeting on Tuesday evening, when Prof. John A. MacFarlane, of the University of Pennsylvania, addressed them on "The Life History of Ferns."

The Philadelphia Bowlers' League will celebrate the end of the bowling season with a banquet to be given at Kugler's next Tuesday evening, when the Florists' bowling team will receive the league's championship trophy, a handsome silver plaque. Captain Moss will accept the trophy on behalf of our bowling club.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions for April 6-12.

In spite of inclement weather conditions, plenty seemed the order of the day, and a huge amount of material changed hands, especially towards the latter end of the week, when weather indications began to improve, and Saturday was really quite an old-timer.

The plenty was most noticeable in the red rose department, occupied by hundreds of Beauties, Brunners, Jacks, Liberties, Meteors and Helen Goulds, with prices ranging all the way from 2 cents each to $4 per dozen, the latter price being realized on best Beauties and a very few Jacks and Liberties. Maids and Brides run from 2 cents each to the limit of $2 per dozen on a few.

Carnations felt the weather a bit, and were not overplenty; but I heard of no calls being unfilled at fair prices, good ones ranging from 2 cents to a possible 4 on fine ones, and some were fine, indeed.

Violets have filled all orders at from 35 to 75 cents per 100.

The bulb goods seem to realize that their season is drawing to a close, but are inclined to make the most of it, and are yet pushing their way valiantly; but quality cannot now be guaranteed.

Events.

Suppose an energetic florist calls upon a stricken household and solicits orders and is told they wish to patronize a reliable local Cambridge firm. Suppose he claims to be a representative of that very firm and gets good orders and a substantial cash payment. Then suppose the fraud is discovered and a policeman stationed to assist in arranging reparation, and, after waiting till midnight, forces the bogus artist to refund the prepayment and go away with his made-up designs. You would suppose the truth, with some few details lacking; but you can readily imagine the feelings of all the different parties concerned.

Retail customers coming into the Park street market and endeavoring to pass themselves off as dealers sometimes display an amusing amount of knowledge, or its lack—e. g., the young lady of last week looking up prices on a "bushel of Asparagus Sprengeri."

This same Park street market, you know, has been on the quiet lookout for a new location for six months, in order to accommodate its enlarged capacities for doing business. At a meeting of the directors last week Messrs. Stickel, Walsh and Cartwright were appointed a special committee, with full powers to arrange for the occupancy of the basement of the large store on Franklin street lately vacated by the Abram French Crockery Co. As this is fully twice the size of the old quarters, it is thought to be sufficient for its purposes for ten years to come, which is the way the lease will read, unless unforeseen obstacles intervene, the change to take place early next fall.

J. J. McCormack has started his plant and nursery stock auctions at 24 and 26 Hawley street.

Club Meeting.

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Monday night, President Walter F. Sheridan presiding. The several committees reported most favorably; the House Committee, of course, most cheeringly. The Summer Outing Committee announced that they had visited all the groves and steamboat agencies in and surrounding the city and laid several of the most favorable offers before the meeting. It was finally decided to go to Witzel's Point View Island, College Point, L. I., on July 7; tickets to be $5.00 each, admitting lady and gentleman. The party will go by the chartered steamer "Isabel" for a sail up the Sound, landing for dinner at the grove about noon. A most enjoyable day is assured and it is to be hoped that all who possibly can will take advantage of it.

John Cleary was appointed manager of the trade exhibit to be given in connection with the Madison Square Garden show next November.

Beaulieu of Woodhaven suggested that the club have a dahlia show in the rooms in September and offered a prize for the best display.

Chas. H. Atkins, of Florham Farms, gave a most interesting talk on "Fertilization of Orchids." The speaker illustrated his remarks with numerous charts and specimens of natural flowers and explained in a most minute manner the mysteries of plant life, so much so that President Sheridan announced his intention of studying Darwin at once. A vote of thanks was given the lecturer, who is one of the young men American floriculture can be proud of.

Items.

Miss Jessie McDougal Elliott, eldest daughter of the late William Elliott, the famous seedsman and auctioneer, was married to William O. Taylor at Christ's Church, 71st Street and Broadway, on April 10. This is the first break in the family. William and Carroll Elliott, who conduct the business in Dey Street, are expected to give a racket shortly.

The Horticultural Society of New York announces an exhibition at the Botanical Garden on May 14th and 15th. The novelty prize of $50 for the best horticultural novelty is again offered, and should bring out another interesting contest. Last year this prize was awarded to Gerbera Jamesoni. Other classes in the schedule call for displays of bulbous plants, flowering trees and shrubs, collection of ferns, orchids, palms, etc. On the afternoon of the first day Dr. Britton will exhibit a series of stereopticon slides, illustrating some of the grand plants of New Zealand. Schedules and further particulars on request to the secretary, 136 Liberty street, New York.

Erie, Pa.—The Schluraff Floral Co. report Easter trade here as better than ever before, perhaps owing to the fine weather for a week previous to Easter, which helped the grower, while the retailer found ready sale at fair prices for all he could produce. Carnations and violets were in greatest demand. John F. Henry, driver and decorator for the Schluraff Floral Co., was united in marriage April 9 to Miss Rilla McKee.

Hastings, Neb.—Charles Winkler, the wholesale and retail florist and vegetable gardener, has purchased 120 acres of choice land one and a half miles northwest from the postoffice. This, in connection with his city greenhouses at 1127½ and 1129 and 1400 to 1406 West Fourth street, is to be devoted to the raising of vegetables, chrysanthemums, roses and carnations.

Springfield, Mass.—At the last meeting of the Amateur Hort. Society an address upon hardy roses was delivered by Abel F. Stevens, of Wellesley. After naming a number of roses which he called standard, he mentioned six of the best new roses, which are these: Helen Gould, Pan-American, Janice Meredith, Soleil d'Or, Gruss au Teplitz and Liberty.

Rock Island, Ill.—The greenhouses recently erected by Ludwig Stapp were one 12½x100 ft. and two 26 ft. 8 in. by 100 ft. Ludwig Stapp is a son of John Stapp, and the houses were built on the latter's land and are connected and run with his range, but the son is the owner of the new houses. The Garland iron gutter was used in the new houses, and Mr. Stapp says it is all right.

The visit of the Review each week is the same as a good meal. I could not do without it.—B. K. Hedrick, Perkasie, Pa.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

The backward spring is making itself felt in the quantity of stock coming into this market, as the supply has decreased materially. Especially is this true of carnations, which during the early part of the past week were in over-supply and good fancies were as low as $2 per 100, and ordinary stock at 50 cents to $1. At the present time the wholesale houses are sold out entirely, and many orders remain unfilled. The price is again back to normal, with fancy at 3 and 4 cents and other grades down to $1 per 100 for culls, etc. There are more pink than red and white together, white having, perhaps, the best call. It is evident that the demand for variegated carnations is dying out, those in the Bradt type especially being hard to move, which shows how public taste will change, as a few years ago variegated carnations were a general favorite, and sold on sight.

Roses, too, were greatly in oversupply in the early part of last week, and if it had not been for the fakirs many would have been thrown on the dump. As it was, very few were lost outright, but job-lot prices prevailed on all carried-over stock, and 50 cents to $1 per 100 helped matters much. Even at the present time the supply of roses is more than ample; but as the demand is much better, the rose growers' prospects are brighter. This week a very good grade of stock in Bride, Maids, Meteor, etc., bring 4 to 5 cents, with seconds and thirds at 2 and 3 cents.

Bulbous stock was just about equal to demand, and was cleaned out pretty well. There is some good stock in this line coming in from George & Allan's. Their long experience with this line of stock has reduced the growing of it to a science, and the best kind of stock can always be looked for.

There is but little smilax to be seen. Violets also appear to be a thing of the past, but sweet peas are taking their place, selling now at 50 to 75 cents per 100.

Various Items.

Richard Witterstaetter's white seedling carnation, 723A, will be known henceforth as Albatross.

Shipping trade held up remarkably well despite the fact that there was a slump in the market, which goes to show that in some respects small towns are sometimes better than large cities.

W. C. Nolan, who formerly ran some greenhouses, and a retail store attached, on Walnut Hill, this city, is now in Oil City, Pa.

Mr. Fine, father of J. G. Fine, of Dayton, Ky., died the past week. Mr. Fine was nearly 87 years old. The sympathy of all the craft is extended to his son.

C. J. Ohmer.

It is reported that a New York florist makes a practice of attaching "sold" tags to all his finest stock, and says it stimulates sales of these flowers, as people are always anxious to secure what has been set aside for someone else and will generally pay well for such in order to get them.

The Market.

There is still an abundant supply of all stock in the market, but conditions have improved some over last week. Prices are no higher, but the stock moves somewhat better. There is now no surplus of Beauties, and there are none too many good white carnations. The quality of all stock is good for the season, owing to the continued cool weather, and shipping demand keeps up well. In prices there is little change from last week. The top on tea roses is $6.00, with the bulk of the stock selling at $3.00 to $5.00. On carnations prices are a little better maintained, especially on whites. Quotations are still $1.00 to $1.25 for commons, $1.50 to $2.00 for selects and $2.50 to $3.00 for fancy, with a few choice varieties reaching $4.00. Harrisii are moving better, but callas still drag. The violet season is practically over, and not many are seen. On the whole, conditions are very satisfactory for the season.

BUYING PLANTS.

I have thought many times that there should be some sort of protection for florists who buy of unknown advertisers in the trade papers. Here is an example of the sort of thing buyers should be protected from:

Wishing some rooted coleus cuttings and seeing some advertised in the REVIEW by a florist (unknown to me), I wrote him under date of March 6th, inquiring if he could furnish me with 1,000 each of Verschaffeltii and Golden Bedder rooted cuttings. March 12th I received a letter from him reading as follows: "Your postal at hand, and in reply will say that I can furnish you with the coleus cuttings in question. The price per 1,000 is $5.50; 2,000, $10.00. Hoping to get an early reply from you, I remain, etc."

By return mail I ordered the coleus and requested that they be sent C. O. D., explaining that owing to previous misfortunes in sending the money before receiving the goods I desired to pay on delivery. I waited and waited for the coleus. It was getting late, and I needed them. I wrote twice to the party for some recognition of my order, but no response. After waiting two weeks I felt that my order had been ignored, and I looked elsewhere for my coleus. I wrote to another advertiser, asking if he could fill my order. On March 27th a postal reached me from the party who had my original order stating that he had sent the coleus. I was not going to accept them, my correspondence having been ignored, and having placed my order with another florist, but the early mail on the 28th brought me word from the second florist that he could not supply me, so I was obliged to accept the first one's coleus, as I needed them so much.

Much to my displeasure, the expressman would not allow me to open the box to see whether the cuttings were satisfactory before I paid for them, so I had to pay for them first. On opening the box I found a note stating that he had only 600 Golden Bedder and had put in 400 mixed to make up the 1,000 of that variety. Upon opening the packages I found that the cuttings were infested with mealy bugs. I think there should be something done to forbid the selling of stock infested as these coleus were. And in the bill he had charged me $11.00 instead of $10.00 as quoted in his letter.

I would like to know what some of my brother florists think of this party's dealings with me. Have they had similar experiences, and in what way can we be protected? W. S. B.

Mass.

[Such cases are certainly very aggravating. The business career of people who do business in such a way as described is bound to be short, as they can never sell twice to the same buyer. The remedy lies in reporting to us any deals of the sort, for we will not carry advs. of people sending out unsatisfactory stock. We have already eliminated a number of such, and with the assistance of our readers we can keep our columns clear of them. By the way, the largest part of the friction between those who buy and sell through the mails seems to be due to failure of the sellers to give proper attention to their correspondence. In the case mentioned by our correspondent the order should have been acknowledged by return mail, and when it was found that the order could not be filled exactly as desired the buyer should have been promptly notified. No shipper has any right to substitute something else without the consent of the buyer. A man may be ordering Golden Bedder coleus when he has other sorts in surplus himself. No man can build up a permanent business unless he gives satisfaction to the buyer. At the same time, buyers ought not to expect too much in the way of quality when a very low price is quoted. Remember that the lowest-priced goods are not always the cheapest, though they can sometimes be used to advantage.—Ed.]

CLIMBING CLOTHILDE SOUPERT.

We note a reference in your Philadelphia notes in the issue of April 10th to Rose Climbing Clothilde Soupert. This rose originated with the P. J. Berckmans Co., Augusta, Ga., who offered it for several years, and we secured stock from them. We offered it in our catalogue for 1901, giving it a color plate, thus attracting attention to its good qualities. We believe that we were the first catalogue house to offer this variety. It is a very rampant climber, and of the greatest value to the general planter. We have a very large stock of it.

A TOUCHY GREEK.

In the Chicago notes in our last issue we printed this:

That there are weak spots in the Beauty market is evidenced by the fact that very good Beauties are being retailed by some of the Greeks at $3.00.

And it has been taken as a "sarcastic reference" by the party whose communication appears below:

Editor Florists' Review: In your issue of April 10th I noticed your sarcastic reference to the "Greeks" selling long-stemmed American Beauties at $3.00 per dozen. I take this as a personal slur and can't understaod why you permit such feather-brained statements to appear in your paper. If I wish to give the public an opportunity to enjoy a handsome flower at a reasooable price, it does not concern anyone. Why not refer to florists of other natioualities in future, as the Swedes are doing so, or the Bohemians, etc., etc.? Such business methods are unworthy of any respect. Please coosider this matter and you will find that I am justified in making these statements.

T. D. MOSCONESOTES.

As the party takes the "sarcastic reference" as a "personal slur," he evidently considers himself the only Greek in Chicago. We hasten to assure him that there are others—quite several others. Some very good people, too. He ought to get acquainted with them.

THRIPS.

In view of the numerous reports of damage by thrips and believing that the fullest informatiou possible regarding this pest should be in the possession of every grower, we requested Prof. F. H. Chittenden, of the Division of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., to prepare an article embodying all that is known regarding this insect, which is so difficult to combat successfully.

This article, which was prepared especially for the REVIEW, appears in this issue, and Mr. Chittenden writes: "There has never been brought together, to my knowledge, so comprehensive a popular article on this insect. I have consulted all of our divisional records of importance as well as literature bearing upon the subject, and have submitted the manuscript to Mr. Th. Pergande, of this office, who is a systematist on the subject of thrips."

DAVENPORT, IA.—Charles Dannacher, who some time ago sold out his business to Otto Klingbeil, has made application to the District Court to foreclose a chattel mortgage and for the appointment of a receiver for the business. He states that in November, 1899, he sold the business to Mr. Klingbeil for $15,000, the terms being $1,000 down and 14 notes of $1,000 each, one to mature each year. He retained certain control of the cash receipts of the business to insure payment of the notes, and under certain conditions the notes were to be paid before maturity. He claims that these conditions have not been met and that he has reason to believe that the defendant contemplates abandoning the business without paying the notes and establishing a competing business, regardless of his contract.

MADISON, N. J.—The Pierson-Sefton Co. has been incorporated, with principal office here, to cultivate flowers, plants, etc. The capital stock is $85,000 aud the incorporators are: Paul M. Pierson, Scarborough, N. Y.; Lincoln Pierson, Madison, N. J.; William Sefton, Jersey City; Louis M. Noe, Madison, N. J.; Charles S. Hunter, New York.

MULCHING FLOWER BEDS.

The advantages accruing to all kinds of plants that are bedded out for the summer months when mulched is always apparent, and the time bestowed upon the work is amply repaid by a greater wealth of flowers, and increased vigor in the plants generally; they are thus able to bear a spell of hot and dry weather without drawbacks.

Certain plants derive greater benefit from mulching than do others; for instance the calceolarias make a more stocky growth, and flower more freely when the soil is kept in a constantly cool moist state. I apply a mulch of decayed mushroom bed materials to all beds of calceolarias, of which we grow about 1,500 plants, the mulch being applied as soon as the planting is finished, and very few plants die. If gardeners, especially those who have to deal with light soils would mulch, they would have no reason to discard calceolarias. C. amplexicaulis attains four feet in height here, and flowers profusely.

Among subjects that may be mulched with much benefit are violas, tuberous-rooted begonias and fuchsias. In large gardens it may not always be possible to do much mulching, garden hands being few, or the material insufficient; it is well, however, to give it to those plants that are known to derive the most benefit from a mulch. Cocoanut-fibre refuse is another very good material, but it does not equal the mushroom-bed manure owing to its lack of manurial properties.

The plan of carpeting the soil beneath the taller bedding-plants, much in vogue in some gardens, is also of assistance in keeping the surface soil cool and moist, but the roots of these carpet-plants take out much moisture from the soil, and are not so good as a mulch.—H. T. Martin, in Gardeners' Chronicle.

HARTFORD, CONN.

In a paper read before the Hartford Florists' Club at a recent meeting Mr. L. H. Mead, who resided six years in Florida and for the last ten years in Connecticut, expressed it as his opinion that the New England gardener who possesses a forcing plant is in a position to successfully compete with the grower of vegetables in Florida. He had found the climate of Florida more variable and much less dependable than that of New England, and told numerous climatic difficulties that the Florida grower has to contend with. He felt that the extra expense of forcing vegetables under glass in the New England States was much more than offset by the control of conditions under glass, finer quality of the product and absence of the risks incidental to a long shipment to a distant market.

He believed that no form of New England agriculture offers a more inviting field for enterprise or more promise of financial profit than the skillful growing of choice vegetables under glass by those qualified with means and talent for the task.

MILWAUKEE.

The newly elected aldermen, as well as those re-elected, took their seats in the Council April 15 among a profusion of flowers such as was never before witnessed here. Each of the forty-six aldermen received several pieces or bunches, some of them of pretty large dimensions. There were horseshoes, baskets, flags, harps, cornucopias and numerous bunches of all descriptions. This practice of presenting flowers is becoming more elaborate at each election and is a boon to the trade. Although there is plenty of stock in the market, the wholesalers cleaned up everything salable. Incog.

ST. PAUL.

Trade since Easter has been good, and every night finds stocks pretty well cleaned up. There were but few "left-overs" from Easter; consequently no surplus has accumulated since. Lilies have been scarce—not equal to the demand. Roses have been fairly plentiful, but more choice stock could be disposed of. The weather has been clear and cold—just right for good blooms, but not good for shoppers. N. Y. Z.

Chester, Pa.—Thomas F. Delahunt, the florist, was killed the evening of April 9 by an electric shock received over the telephone. His attention was attracted by a peculiar noise at the 'phone, and, going to the transmitter, took it down with both hands. He received a tremendous shock and staggered back into the arms of an assistant and a customer. They were unable to resuscitate him, pending the arrival of a physician, and his death ensued. He was a widower, about 36 years of age, and leaves one child.

Washington, D. C.—Mr. P. H. Dorsett, for some years past connected with the Department of Agriculture here, has removed to Santa Ana, Cal., which will be his home in future.

The Florists' Manual by William Scott

Is a book of 224 pages, and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half tone engravings. It is

MADISON, N. J.

The Morris County Gardeners and Florists held their regular meeting in Masonic Hall, Madison, on Wednesday last. The attraction of the evening was a fine exhibit of carnation Adonis brought on from Philadelphia by Mr. W. P. Craig, who made a few remarks concerning it. Adonis and Gaiety were also sent by Mr. E. G. Hill, of Richmond, but unfortunately arrived after the meeting was over. They came through in good shape, and it was a pity that those present were unable to see this grand lot of flowers. A certificate of merit was awarded to Mr. Craig.

Mr. W. H. Thomas exhibited magnificent frame-grown Marie Louise violets, and promised to read a paper on his cultural methods at a later date.

Mr. Charles H. Totty was the essayist of the evening, chrysanthemums the theme, and it is needless to say the subject was well handled, many of those present availing themselves of the opportunity to imbibe at this fountain of mum wisdom the questions submitted to the essayist, bringing out essential points of good culture.

A draft of the schedule was submitted and discussed, and will be complete by the next meeting. It was also announced that Professor J. B. Smith, of the New Jersey Experiment Station, would lecture at the May meeting on "Garden Pests." H.

GERMANTOWN, PA.

The Germantown Horticultural Society held its April meeting on Monday. Edw. C. Jellett read an excellent paper on wild gardening and its meaning. The attendance was very large. The features of the exhibition were three fine vases of Beauties, John Burton taking first, Joseph Heacock second. J. W. Young was first on teas, with Sunrise. The American Rose Co. sent a fine vase of Ivory. There were many other fine exhibits. Phil.

HEAVY PACKAGES.

On the 3d inst. I received a shipment of plants from California on which the express charges were $6.00, though the bill for the plants was only $2.00. The plants weighed only 21 pounds, while the box without packing material weighed 38 pounds.

Please remind shippers through your paper to use packing material as light as possible and not to use a 100-pound box for plants weighing 5 pounds.

Austin, Tex. W. Tell.

Jacksonville, Fla.—C. D. Mills reports his Easter trade as fully 25 per cent. better than any previous year. He sold out on cut flowers and practically so on flowering plants, but was able to supply all demands. He was short of Harrisii plants, but a fine lot of callas, hydrangeas and azaleas sold well. He notes a better appreciation of and a growing demand for the best in flowers and plants and a willingness to pay fair prices for same.

A Seasonable Hint.—This is a good time to order a copy of the Florists' Manual, by William Scott, if you do not already have a copy. It costs $5, but contains more matter of real value to florists than a library of other books costing from $50 to $75.

EVERY FLORIST OUGHT TO INSURE HIS GLASS AGAINST HAIL
For Particulars Address

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Trade has shown remarkable activity since the first of the month. There is a steady demand for funeral work. Counter trade is also increasing. This market is fairly deluged with stock to suit the tastes and pocketbooks of everybody, and it all sells. We now have our regular bargain days, and last Saturday there were no less than 60,000 carnations sold at from 12 to 35 cents per dozen; 15,000 assorted roses at 50 cents per dozen, and 3,000 American Beauties at from 25 cents to $3 per dozen.

Society is apparently sidetracked for awhile. Divorces are being substituted for marriages, and we hear of very few decorations for entertainments of any importance.

The Kansas City spirit has again asserted itself in a way that will help to educate the young generation in the art of gardening. A brilliant idea, and which originated with the Woman's Auxiliary of the Manufacturers' Association, is the distributing of 60,000 small packages of seed among the school children for the purpose of encouraging the growing of flowers. To insure good results premiums will be given to those displaying the most skill in helping to make our city more beautiful.

The first automobile ride indulged in by the writer was taken one day last week, when, in company with W. L. Rock, we visited the greenhouses of the Rock-Heite Co., located on South Troost avenue. This finely constructed range of houses was built last summer, but owing to the extreme heat and drought was not planted with young stock until late in the fall. Under Charley Heite's efficient management everything is in a thrifty condition, especially the carnations, and such varieties as Crane, Marquis, Scott and Mary Wood are here grown to perfection. A bench of sweet peas and one of Spanish iris have also proved very profitable the last two months, and this enterprising young firm is exultant over the success of its venture. It is Mr. Rock's intention to add 20,000 feet more glass the coming summer.

Mr. F. J. Taggart thinks the time rather premature to publish the general plan of next November's show, and remarked that Kansas City had the only convention hall and would not be outdone by other cities in giving a flower show. The services of the following gentlemen have been secured to act as judges: Edwin A. Kanst, of Chicago; John Young, secretary of the New York Florists' Club, and Edwin Lonsdale, of Philadelphia. H. J. M.

THE BEST EVER.

Your paper is a fine drawer for orders—the best we ever saw; so good that it has forced us to work day and night, not running our stock out, but down so fast we were afraid our overflow of new orders would cramp us. We never allow our stock to get below a certain point.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Hardy Plants.

We have had a long, lingering, cool time since we first thought spring had come. This has been very favorable to nurserymen and those doing planting, and the season can always be prolonged by correct and careful work. Deciduous plants should be moved and planted as soon as possible. Florists have very little to do with fruit trees, but many of us do handle shrubs, and the ordinary flowering shrub is very tenacious of life. When you make a plantation for a customer it is well to let them see the shrubs before cutting back, but insist that you be allowed to prune them hard back directly after planting. So shrubs even when started into leaf can be transplanted if well soaked at planting and given a good cut back. I am not a crank on pruning by any means, for after a shrub or tree is once started to grow few of them are improved by any pruning, but at the transplanting time it is the salvation of our trees and shrubs.

Don't make the mistake of being in a hurry about planting or transplanting evergreens. There is nothing gained, in fact it is a disadvantage to disturb conifers, so-called evergreens, till they are just starting into growth. In our latitude this is usually about the middle of May.

Bay Trees.

We notice that our customers who have not traveled on the other side of the Atlantic are not aware of the hardiness of our imported sweet bays. And some florists are too much inclined to coddle them up. Get them out of doors into the sunshine and rain. A few degrees of frost does them no harm, and if they have been kept in a cool shed 10 degrees would do them no harm, but it all depends on what treatment they have had during winter. We have had some expensive experience in this line. The Laurus nobilis (silver bay) is a hardy evergreen in the south of England and milder parts of the British Isles and 20 degrees of frost does it no harm, but if you have been keeping these tub-grown plants in a greenhouse at, say, 40 to 50 degrees at night, and then suddenly expose them to 10 degrees of frost, they will give up the ghost.

Hydrangeas.

Hydrangeas that have been kept dormant all winter will want to grow whether you have them in a cold shed or basement or any other place that is a few degrees above freezing, and if they grow under glass or any other shelter the growth will be soft and unsuited to make a good show during summer. Get them out of doors as soon as possible. The less growth they make under their winter quarters the more satisfactory they will be during summer.

Next Week.

There is a greater number of subjects I would like to exchange views on, but time forbids, and I can only promise that next issue I will give you fourteen chapters on seasonable subjects.

DISEASED GERANIUMS AND RUSTY VERBENAS.

A correspondent who we will call "N. C. M." sent a plant of Heteranthe geranium and a rusted verbena to the editor who gave his version of the trouble and about covered the ground, and I can improve but little on it. The verbena rust is an old enemy and is not worth fighting. Named verbenas are a thing of the past as beds of one color are no longer asked for. Therefore seedlings are raised with one-half the expense and are always healthy and vigorous. And as good a strain of colors can now be depended on from seed obtained from our reputable seedsmen as the named varieties, so why bother with any method but raising from seed?

The trouble with the geranium is not, I think, any bacterial disease or attack of insects. Neither is it the result of any peculiar soil or treatment, it is simply the habit of the variety. This is not a scientific explanation, but it is good enough for practical purposes, because any attempt to remedy the trouble in the plant would be waste of time. These blind shoots, which, instead of making a normal growth, form a tuft of small leaves, is peculiar to a few varieties and when it appears to any serious extent get rid of the variety and substitute something better.

The finest semi-double pink zonal geranium we had for years was Emile de Gerardin, but it became latterly so troubled with this blind shoot business that we were glad when Frances Perkins came to town, for it is better in every way. Heteranthe is not a valuable variety. Instead of any attempted treatment as a cure, all you can do is to throw away every plant showing the slightest sign of this form. We used to plant out some of the plants, thinking they would grow out of it during the summer. Don't do it; you are only perpetuating a diseased plant.

Preparing Soil for Planting.

In order to have soil in good condition for planting, it ought to be collected in good time. If the collecting has not been done in the fall it should now be done as soon as possible. For my own growing I prefer soil collected during spring, as it is not so liable to grow green scum on the surface as that which has lain in the pile all winter.

The top spit, 4 or 5 inches deep, of old pasture land, where the soil is of a yellow loam, is in my experience the best for nearly all varieties of roses. This should be built in a neat pile and not thrown loosely in a heap, keeping the sides as nearly vertical as possible by building up with sods until it is about a foot high, keeping count of the number of loads; then on top of this to every four or five loads spread one load of rich old manure (cow manure if it can be had); then begin another layer of sods, alternating with the required proportion of manure, till the pile is complete. In about three weeks the pile will be ready to chop up. By using a well sharpened spade it can be cut into any size required. For roses it is best not to have it too fine; the sod and manure should be cut into pieces of about 2 or 3 inches in diameter.

After eight or ten days the pile should be turned over so that the soil and manure will be thoroughly incorporated; if time allows, it will be all the better for a second turning. In preparing the soil it is well to remember that it should never be handled when in a wet condition, nor when it is raining. The piling and mixing should be done on ground that is a little elevated in order to keep the bottom dry and sweet. If bone is to be used it is better to add it when the soil is on the bench.

It was with great pleasure I read the able article on "Thrips" in your last week's issue. This is the kind of information so much desired by progressive growers. Few of us have the opportunities and facilities for acquiring such knowledge. Instructive articles like this confer a lasting benefit to the craft. We hope to see more of them.

CARNATION NOTES.

Cultivating.

Please ask Mr. Baur which is the best hand cultivator of which he writes in the April 10th Review, page 700, for hand cultivation of carnations in the field.

C. W.

I am not prepared to say that any one special make of hand cultivator is better than all others. There are a number of different kinds on the market, and it is a matter of opinion which will suit him best. We have two Planet, Jr., and both are giving excellent service. We especially like the one called "Gem of the Garden," because it has five separate teeth so arranged that they pulverize the soil thoroughly as it is pushed through. It can also be arranged to fit in either a wide or a narrow row, thus saving your going through the same row twice. No doubt there are other makes and your hardware dealer can supply your wants. There is no tool in our possession that saves us as much time as do these hand-cultivators.

Planting in Field.

We are having a dry spell just now such as I spoke of not long since in these notes, and the young plants are beginning to show the effects of it in spots where the soil was just a trifle rough. When you plant be sure and dig up the soil with your trowel until you can set the young plant in moist soil, and when finished planting rake a half inch of loose soil over that which has been pressed around the plant. This will hold the moisture in the soil just like a mulch holds it in the benches inside. If you are compelled to water the young plants after planting be sure and do the same, as it will keep the soil from baking and doing more damage than if no water were given. It will save you at least two-thirds of the watering and you will find that watering each plant separately will do more good than to water the whole patch with the hose or lawn sprinkler.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOVELTIES.

At this season of the year when the grower is stocking up with such new things as he thinks may be useful to him in his business, it is well to remember that to give a variety a true, fair test, one should buy a sufficient number of plants. It is a common practice and a very wrong one, I think, to buy from three to six plants of a new variety, and increase them by topping and rooting every small growth that can be got. When this is done the vitality of that particular sort is impaired to such an extent that instead of making a good growth and producing large, perfect flowers, the product is of very mediocre quality indeed, compared with standard varieties growing in the same house, and which were not propagated to death, because there was any quantity of stock on hand to work from.

Then we hear the usual talk of the robbers who sent out so and so, when "they knew it didn't amount to anything. Might as well put their hands in your pocket," and so on. Many a beautiful variety is discarded just simply on account of this practice, and it is a practice that the introducer is sometimes guilty of also, judging by the quality of the young stock that is occasionally received.

When we receive a new variety we make no attempt to increase the stock, because we figure out that the introducer has probably done about as much increasing as the plant will conveniently permit for one year, if the variety is a choice one and the demand consequently brisk. The best plan is to grow a new variety the first year as well as you can. Then if it is satisfactory it can be increased a hundred fold for next season with satisfaction to every one.

Novelties we must have, particularly those who wish to figure as exhibitors, and if the purely commercial grower would increase his list of varieties considerably, I believe it would do much to relieve the glut of the eternal Robinsons and Bonnaffons that annually occurs in the fall. The fact that the Chrysanthemum Society is holding an exhibition this year in conjunction with the Horticultural Society of Chicago should encourage the growers in the Middle States to stock up more on the newer kinds, in anticipation of the extra demand that an exhibition always brings in its train, and in anticipation of carrying off a few prizes, also. In judging, all things being otherwise equal, a new variety will get a decision over an old one every time.

One of the most pleasing things to me is to note the increase of good pink varieties as compared with a few years ago. Morel has been queen in this class for so long that it is a pleasure to note in addition Lady Harriet, Mrs. Barkley, Mrs. Coombes, Mrs. Chamberlain, A. J. Balfour, Yanariva and others, giving a good range of color in light and dark shades, and stretching over the entire season. Any one of these varieties is good enough to grow commercially in quantity as well as being of service to the exhibitor.

Mrs. George Mileham is another pink coming to us with a great reputation from Europe, on the style of Mrs. Barkley, but with a longer petal. Bentley may also prove a valuable addition in this class as it seems to be a very vigorous grower.

New whites are numerous, possibly too much so, as this class is already well filled. Florence Molyneaux is classed as an enormous incurved. Princess Alice de Monaco is also an incurved of the purest possible white. These two varieties are Japanese Incurved, strictly speaking. Mme. R. Cadbury is an immense flower with a very broad petal. It is a good grower and seems to be worth watching. Miss Alice Byron is another beautiful white, though at present rather delicate in constitution. It is perhaps somewhat soft to ship, and must not be left too long on the plant or it will show an eye, but it is well worth trying.

In yellows, J. R. Upton, an Australian variety, is fine as a light yellow, but stock seems hard to procure. Miss Jessie Cottee, a golden yellow sport from Etoile de Lyon, will probably be found useful to those exhibitors who used to grow the parent variety to perfection. Etoile de Lyon used to be considered coarse by some growers, but there was never any question regarding its size if well done.

I recommended Kate Broomhead very highly in these pages last spring and it certainly fulfilled all its promises. It is indispensable as a bronze, its only fault being that if cut with too long a stem it does not take up the water as well as it might.

In the crimsons, H. J. Jones seems to stand alone, owing to its immense size and the fact that it does not burn. Dazzler, a new European variety, seems much thought of. It is claimed that this variety is the most brilliantly colored of all the crimsons. Another year's trial will better determine its merits or otherwise.

The exhibitor has not only got to keep up with the band wagon in the procession of new varieties, but he has got to keep a little ahead of it, if he is to keep on top. We hear a good deal about the decadence of the mum, yet the money spent in importing new varieties from other countries alone is enormous, without taking into account any of our own product.

For the commercial man who believes in the early varieties, the yellow sport of Glory of the Pacific (which I note has been named Cremo) may prove acceptable. I have not seen the flower personally, but it seems to me that there is a place for it alongside its pink and white progenitors. A yellow that, while it can hardly be classed as a novelty, is almost unknown among the average growers, is Robert Halliday. It is early, coming in about October 15th, and will be found generally a satisfactory variety to grow.

BUSINESS METHODS FOR BUSY FLORISTS.

No. 2.

In our former article we pointed out the necessity for systematic methods in conducting a business. In this and succeeding articles we shall offer such practical suggestions as a twenty years' experience in this and kindred lines may have developed.

First and foremost in the business is the record of expenses, but for convenience we will pass that for the time and address ourselves to the record of our output. A florist establishment can be likened to a manufacturing industry, where labor, skill and knowledge are the raw materials from which the finished products are evolved. Every florist, no matter how large or small his establishment, should keep a record of stock grown in each house and range of houses. In order to do this systematically and promptly he should secure a record book.

Various forms have been used, but for economy and simplicity a "daily cash record book" which I have seen and used is the handiest I know of. Each page contains thirty-one lines, one for each day of the month, ruled transversely with ten or twelve columns for dollars and cents. (See section of this book reproduced herewith in type.) Every second column is numbered consecutively from 1, each number to correspond with the number of the house which it represents, and each house, no matter how small, should receive a corresponding number in the book.

Date 1901	No. 1	Golden Gate	No. 2	Lawson	No. 3	Brides	No. 4	Maids
Sep. 1	15	$0.45	0		12	$0.35	37	$1.00
" 2	38	1.25	0		36	1.00	43	1.10
" 3	65	2.00	5	$0.15	97	3.02	80	2.20
" 4	103	3.00	8	.24	142	4.00	108	3.00
" 5	125	3.50	3	.09	153	4.50	96	3.00
" 6	160	4.50	7	.21	180	5.40	112	3.40

In the first column mark the daily output of the house, in the second the value or price obtained for same. If the house is planted to carnations or roses, mums or violets, the record is easily kept. If the place is a commercial establishment each house will be in charge of some particular man, and he should be held to a strict accounting for the product of the house. Each cut should be carefully recorded on slips or tabs, and at the end of the day be permanently recorded in the record book.

The exact value of the individual cut cannot always be definitely known, but can at least be approximated. The total sales for the day from all houses can be extended in a separate column at the end of the last numbered column. The total monthly sales for each house can be easily determined by adding each vertical column separately at the end of the month, and the sum of these totals should equal the sum of the daily totals, thus proving your work.

If pot plants are grown in any of the houses, and are shifted from house to house, as Easter stock often is, the record can be kept of the time they were in each house, and when finally sold distribution of proper amounts can be made to each house in proportion to time, labor, heat, etc., in each. If you wish to carry the system still further, the labor bestowed upon each house can be recorded daily and the fuel bill apportioned at the end of the month, or oftener, if desired.

In some large concerns the exact amount of fuel consumed each twenty-four hours is accurately recorded. These daily records are in use in many concerns, varied to suit the convenience or desires of individual firms. To all such these suggestions may not have any special value. But many good firms, some employing a great many hands and having a daily output running into thousands of dollars, have no systematic record of their output. To all these and to the hundreds of smaller concerns employing but little help or none at all, I wish to lay special emphasis on adopting some plan for keeping records. The one I have outlined may not be complete enough for some, or be too intricate for others. In either case get what good you can from these few pointers, use them as the basis for something better, and begin at once to systematize your work.

Along with this daily record keep a diary of the weather, in the same book if you like. As much depends upon the sunshine and bright weather in the florist business, an intelligent comparison of records cannot be made without the weather conditions being known.

Our readers may think that to follow these suggestions may require a great deal of time and labor. If your place is small the time consumed in keeping this record will not exceed three minutes per day for each house. If your establishment is large you have, or should have, a competent bookkeeper, who can do all this work without much extra exertion. But whether large or small, the success or failure of your business and of any business depends upon strict attention to detail work. SYSTEM.

KEEPING CUT FLOWERS.

A correspondent, "H. G. F.," asks the following: "Whether carnations and cut roses put in water and in refrigerator keep better than when laid on wet trays in refrigerator."

There is some difference of opinion about where to keep cut flowers, or, rather, under what conditions. Some of those big fellows who handle one hundred dollars' worth to my one dollar's worth ought to have most correct opinions on this subject, for they have had the advantage of great experience. But as to whether the stems should be in water or merely lying on a tray there can be no reasonable doubt. The stems should certainly be in water. Without it unless the atmosphere surrounding them was heavily charged with moisture they would assuredly wilt, and too much moisture would be ruinous to the flowers, and in a refrigerator there is little moisture. I trust in the above I have answered the specific question.

Now, for my own opinion on this very important question, I hate the very name of refrigerator in connection with cut flowers, as his satantic majesty is alleged to have an intense antipathy to adulterated and odorous water. Some people, people who should know, say carnations should be placed in jars of water and placed in a cool, dry cellar or room. That is not my experience. The cool cellar is all right, but let it be rather moist. As to roses, there is no doubt about where to keep them for 24 or 48 hours, as occasionally we must do—a cool cellar, and let it be as moist as you like, and I know of no flowers that are an exception to this treatment except one or two.

Violets should not be put in an ice box or very cold room or they will lose their odor entirely, and what is a violet without its sweetness? and violets have to be kept but a short time, but during that few hours keep them wrapped in oil paper and in a close box, each bunch in a small vase or glass, but even if you don't put them in water, being wrapped in oil paper and not exposed to the air, they will keep fresh as long as they should. Stemless orchids, such as the cattleyas and coelogyne, will do very well laid on wet paper in a cool cellar, or if you can get their short stems to touch the water they will last a long time in a room where the temperature is 40 to 50 degrees.

The ice box, I realize, is the great attraction of a flower store and the very best "adv." you can make is a fine show in the ice box, and nowadays they are a most expensive and important part of all well regulated florists' shops. But if you carry a large stock or have to keep unsold stock over night, for gracious sake put it in a cool, moist cellar. I have already extended these few remarks further than I intended, but I say finally that a cellar where the temperature is about 35 to 40 degrees in winter and 40 to 50 degrees in summer is about ideal. And the ice box is a humbug and abomination except for the display of flowers which must be only considered as a sacrifice or outlay in the shape of an advertisement.

There is a brilliant young florist of Philadelphia who has two stores. In one of them he has no ice box, "flowers fresh and high priced," the other "ice box flowers and lower priced" flowers. He is on the right track and is, I believe, prosperous—at least he owes me nothing. Avoid the refrigerator all you can except for advertising purposes. W. S.

CARNATION ENCHANTRESS.

Peter Fisher, of Ellis, Mass., has sold the stock of his light pink carnation Enchantress to the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., and it is said that the price paid was $10,000.

The color is of the Daybreak type, but deeper, and Mr. Fisher says the variety is superior to Lawson in every way. Lawson is the pollen parent. Anything that Mr. Fisher announces as superior to Lawson is certainly of the greatest interest.

We present herewith an engraving from a bloom of Enchantress.

HEATING.

I have a carnation house 70x18, the side walls 3 feet high and the ridge 10 feet. The boiler is about 2 feet below the level of the floor. There is a 4-inch header above the boiler (which heats another house also) from which two 2-inch flows rise about 5 feet, enter the house and immediately fall, are then carried along the sides of the house and have a fall of about 4 inches. The returns are two 4-inch cast iron pipes which are placed under the side benches. The header of the boiler is about 9 inches higher than the side of the house.

I am told by an expert plumber that I would get better results if I carried the flow pipe under the benches. It would then be about 6 inches higher than the returns at the boiler, and if I followed his advice would have to rise to connect with the returns. A florist advises me to carry them on the purlins with a fall of about one foot, and thinks one return would give better results.

Is there enough pipe to keep the house at 50 degrees in zero weather? And what would you advise doing? The boiler cannot be lowered on account of the danger of flooding. F. M.

In reply to the inquiry of F. M., he has certainly a very badly arranged heating system in his greenhouse and I am not surprised that he has been unable to secure the desired results. He has sufficient heating surface in the house, provided he could secure a perfect circulation, which can only be done by dropping the boiler, and there is no good reason why such dropping of the boiler could not be done, as the making of a water-tight cellar is a very simple and inexpensive undertaking.

If, however, he does not wish to undertake the dropping of the boiler, the only remedy would be to raise the header to as high a point as is possible and then run four lines of 2-inch pipe along the house, say one attached to the purlin of each slope of the roof and the other two on the center column, giving them a fall of at least 1 foot to the far end of the house, then dropping as near vertically as possible, each pipe connecting to one of the 4-inch returns, keeping the returns up as close to the bottom of the bench as would be practicable and running back to the boiler end with a fall of about 1 foot, then making a vertical drop to the return connection of the boiler. This will increase the heating surface in the house, but is necessary in view of the slow and consequently ineffective circulation attainable.

Means for expansion and for relief of air must be provided above the level of the header as in any other system. Mr. M. must bear in mind, in considering the reinstallation of his apparatus, that he consumes more coal and consequently requires more labor in running the heating plant defectively installed than he would with the properly arranged apparatus having a boiler pit 2 or 3 feet deeper.

New York. Henry W. Gibbons.

MORE ABOUT PIPE.

[Read by A. E. Ford, of Ford & Kendig Co., Philadelphia, before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, April 1, 1902.]

Your genial secretary in extending his official invitation was kind enough to originate the title "More About Pipe," but failed to advise on what point you wished for more information than you now possess. I am, therefore, led to conjecture that you may possibly desire to have the benefit of what knowledge I may have gained of both the manufacture and vending of wrought pipe, and will govern myself accordingly.

The manufacture of wrought pipe, while being of special interest to those who are interested in its production and sale, is of more than passing moment to Philadelphians, for the reason that it was in this city that the first machine-made pipe was manufactured in America under patents secured from England, about the year 1835, an industry that afterward had an enormous development and became a prominent feature in the business of this great industrial city. Prior to the time stated, pipe had been made by hand in England and here, and was necessarily very expensive, so that when gas was first introduced into Philadelphia old gun barrels were used as a substitute until the supply became exhausted.

With regard to the original makers of wrought pipe in this country, there seems to be some uncertainty, the claim having been made by Mr. Samuel Griffith, who had a furnace on the site of what is now 27 North Seventh street, and by Morris, Tasker & Morris, who were located at Third and Pear streets, where they carried on a foundry business and made a specialty of the manufacture of stoves, ranges, heaters, etc. It is no province of mine to endeavor to establish as to which of these claims was correct, but as Mr. Griffith never reached a point much beyond his original venture, and Morris, Tasker & Co. expanded to such an extent as to become at one time the absolute controllers of the pipe industry, I shall deal with that firm in making further comparisons.

It is, of course, understood that all wrought pipe made and used at the time mentioned was "iron and butt welded," the commercial lengths being about 12 feet, and the gross product of this infant industry about ten tons per week. And in order to protect same in a measure from foreign competition, it was decided to adopt a different standard of threads to be known as the "American gauge," which at this day necessitates our makers using the English threads on all pipe intended for export. From this small beginning has grown up one of the great industries of this country, which gives us a practical illustration of our marvelous industrial growth, which does now and will still further in the future enable us to dominate the markets of the world. The present production of wrought tubular goods in America is not less than 5,000 tons per day, a capacity which equals at least that of England and Germany combined. Where the original range of sizes was from one-half inch to one inch, we now manufacture from one-half inch to thirty inches, the larger sizes being "lap welded" instead of "butt welded."

The growth has, of course, been gradual, and much of it has been attained since the introduction of steel as a factor in pipe making, which was first done successfully in 1885 by Mr. F. J. Hearne at Wheeling, W. Va., this gentleman now being the president of the National Tube Co., which is one of the constituent companies of the United States Steel Corporation. This innovation you will readily understand was vigorously combated by the makers of iron pipe, but slowly but surely steel has forced its way until it is to-day more of a king in the industrial world than cotton ever was.

I think, gentlemen, I have now reached the point which I understand was the subject of former discussion and possibly differences of opinion, and I wish to say that any sentiments which I may express simply represent my individual experience and judgment. To my mind there is no question that iron pipe as originally made from A1 quality of pig iron was, for some purposes, superior to the present soft steel article manufactured by the Bessemer process, but unfortunately commercial conditions have made it impossible to procure such pipe except at a price which would be practically prohibitive to the ordinary user, and we, therefore, have to choose between a so-called wrought iron pipe, which is manufactured largely from scrap iron, and which frequently contains a mixture of hard steel which unfits it for many uses, particularly when you have to cut it up, and a pipe of pure steel.

In making this statement relative to iron pipe, you will understand that I am making no charge of any unfairness on the part of the manufacturers, as it is absolutely necessary for them to bring the cost of their product down to a point where they can make such selling prices as will enable them to compete with the cheaper article. In other words, it has become a choice largely between "good steel pipe" and "uncertain iron pipe," and my individual leaning is toward the former. Even if it were possible to get the kind of iron pipe "our fathers used," there would still be many uses for which steel would be preferable, particularly where tensile strength is to be considered. To more readily understand the differences between iron and steel pipe, it might possibly be well to explain tersely the difference in their production.

In making iron pipe originally a high grade of pig iron was used, same being puddled by hand labor into what is termed "muck bar." This is then piled into fagots, which in turn are rolled into sheets of the proper diameter for each size, the term for which is "pipe skelp." This skelp is then brought to the welding furnaces and brought to a finished condition.

The difference in making steel pipe is, of course, in the processes previous to its reaching the welding furnaces, where the work is practically the same. The steel process of to-day has simply changed the manufacture of the raw material from hard labor to a mechanical manipulation of the original melting stock, the only difference being that the steel ingot is cast and consequently devoid of the fiber which you find in iron. The steel pipe, owing to this process, has much more tensile strength than iron, and is, therefore, much more suitable for high pressure work. Iron pipe, when made as it should be, is undoubtedly more ductile than steel as made at present, but if, as claimed, there is at least two-thirds scrap placed in the puddling furnace, the result must be a bar which is hard and un-uniform, in consequence of which the skelp of which this pipe is made does not possess the ductile and welding qualities which formerly distinguished the iron pipe.

I have not touched on the matter of corrosion, because that becomes at times a matter largely of local conditions. I have seen cases where iron pipe did not give as good satisfaction as steel, and others where the reverse was the case, so that I think it is only fair to leave that question an open one. There is another point in this connection, which, while it may not specially interest the members of this club, is an important one to the users of wrought pipe, and that is the matter of "electrolysis." While I have no special data on this subject, I have heard it stated, without contradiction, that wrought steel pipe will show less impairment from electrical action than wrought or cast iron pipe.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I think that the efforts of the future will not be with a desire to make iron pipe to compete with steel at the expense of the quality of the former, but rather to so improve the quality of the steel product as to make it equal in every respect to the iron pipe which was formerly made under more favorable conditions than now exist, leaving iron pipe to occupy the same comparative position relative to steel pipe as other iron products do to similar articles of steel.

NEW CARNATIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Probably no city in the United States is today supplied with finer carnation blooms than is San Francisco, Cal. The writer recently paid a visit to the metropolis of the Pacific coast and was very much surprised at the excellence of the stock in the florists' windows, and especially so those shown by John H. Sievers & Co. Sievers' carnations are well known on the Pacific coast, but not so well known in the eastern states as they ought to be. We predict the following list, most of which will be introduced to the public next season, will startle the carnation world and will entirely lay in the shade anything introduced to date. For a number of years John H. Sievers & Co. have been hybridizing and producing new carnations; only a few of them have found their way into public channels, yet a few of them are well known and highly esteemed in the eastern states.

Of the many new varieties of merit now in the hands of this firm, probably none give greater promise than Hannah Hobart. This is really a remarkable flower, never less than 4 inches, and frequently 4½ inches across. (This is getting pretty close to "Uncle John's" ideal.) In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different; in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. We saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms in sight and not a poor one in the lot, and every one the exact counterpart of the other, no bursted calyx, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. Mr. Sievers has been growing this variety about five years, but as yet it is not disseminated except, I believe, to one or two eastern men on trial. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it; it knocks Lawson into a "cocked hat" and averages all the time an inch larger.

Another remarkable variety, and one which I believe will become a universal favorite, is A. B. Spreckles. In color a bright scarlet; very double, and every petal deeply fimbriated; of immense size, being very little behind Hobart in diameter, but the quality that will commend it to the public is its odor. It has the finest and fullest old clove perfume; one smell lasts half a day, and one bloom will perfume a room. The petal arrangement is about perfect, and the stem, calyx, and general habit of the plant all that can be desired. I want you eastern fellows to "keep your eye" on Spreckles.

Another good one not yet out but which has been grown by Mr. Sievers for some time is Mrs. McKinley. In color a deep rose-pink; averages 3½ inches; not quite such a fine stem as the two former, but a fine seller, and free bloomer. Is bound to become a favorite with the public.

R. Raymond is an improved Daybreak, and the finest carnation of its color. It averages 3½ inches, is carried on fine stems, never bursts, and is a remarkable keeper. It has the peculiar habit of requiring three to four days on the plant to perfect itself even after it seems to be developed.

Jenny Giffard is a fine free carnation, rose-pink, fringed and carried on a grand stem 24 to 30 inches. Is not a cropper, but always in bloom. We understand that all of the above varieties will be sent out by John H. Sievers & Co. next season, i. e., in 1903.

The greenhouses where these fine carnations are grown are within the city limits of San Francisco, and cars run within a couple of blocks of the houses. The houses are mostly three-quarter span facing the south, and are almost wholly devoted to carnations. Not only are their own fine productions grown, but quite a good deal of space is devoted to the newer eastern varieties. Here may be seen a fine house of Lawson, grown perhaps as well as Mr. Peter Fisher ever saw them, but a bunch of Lawson placed alongside of a bunch of Hobart gives as great a contrast as would a bunch of Portia alongside a bunch of Crane.

This, you know, is the home of "Crocker," and if some of our eastern brethren could see Crocker as here grown, they would feel like giving it a fair trial. John Hinkle, sent out by this firm some two or three years ago, is, in San Francisco, one of the most profitable and satisfactory varieties grown. It is not as well known in the east as it ought to be. In color it is a Roosevelt, but in size it puts this variety in the shade about an inch. It has remarkable stems, never bursts, and, as the foreman, Mr. Thos. E. Hooper, remarked, "You can always cut a handful." We think this variety is at present overlooked.

One of the most remarkable fancy carnations ever seen is here grown very profitably. How does "buff with pink stripes" meet your fancy? This is the color of Iris Miller. I am told it is a really good seller, and very productive.

Louise Sievers is the newest thing in yellow, a bloom of good size, 3 inches and over; clear lemon-yellow, with delicate pink penciling, yet hardly enough of the latter to dull the yellow ground. It was showing fine crop. This is a color always in demand, but few yellow carnations seem to have a long reign.

There are many other good things in new carnations to be seen at Sievers', some of which give great promise, but which are not yet sufficiently tried on the home grounds. The newer eastern kinds are not neglected; 2,000 Lawson were looking fine, and Mr. Hooper thinks well of it. The stems were better and longer than are usually seen on this variety, and not so many with the football crop of hair so characteristic of Lawson. About a dozen houses are devoted to carnations, all of which were in the pink of condition; in fact, the finest grown carnations I have ever seen.

The man behind the bat in this game of carnation growing at the establishment of John H. Sievers & Co. is the able foreman, Thos. E. Hooper. Mr. Hooper is a comparatively young man, and a true western one. He commenced as errand boy for the old firm of Miller & Sievers, and has worked his way up to his present position. It is the skilful hand of Mr. Hooper that does all the hybridizing; in fact, no other man knows the parentage of the many notable new carnations now in his care. I asked Mr. Hooper if he had any objection to giving his cultural methods to the public, and he replied "none in the world," and as they are so radically opposed to most methods in vogue I gladly give them here.

The natural soil here is a sandy loam of a somewhat yellow color. To ten loads of this soil Mr. Hooper adds two loads of old cow manure, and two loads of sand. The carnation likes sand, says Hooper. The plants are benched about August 1. No top dressing is ever used; the soil is never cultivated nor scratched, but is hand weeded as often as necessary. No feed or stimulation of any kind is ever used before the first of February, and then nothing but liquid. Three pounds of nitrate of soda to 500 gallons of water is the stimulant here used. One man does all the watering, and he certainly has his practice reduced to a science. Syringing overhead is never practiced except to reduce spider. Airing is strictly attended to. I was at the greenhouses early in the morning, and though no sun was shining yet the ventilators were open about three inches. This may have been on all night, but I did not ask. The whole place reflects the greatest credit on the grower, as the stock was fine.

Some space is here given to orchids, palms and pelargoniums. I noted a splendid batch of Cocos Weddeliana from seed, in threes plunged in sand. In the propagating houses, which are all north-side, were thousands of rooted, and being rooted, carnations, all of which looked in the pink of condition. I noted that none of the cuttings were shorn, but retained all the foliage. Mr. Hooper things he gets a stronger plant this way.

It is a practice with the firm of John H. Sievers & Co. never to send out a carnation till they have a better one. I cannot say that I commend the practice. I have had a peep at the "better one" in the present case. It is a scarlet sport of Hannah Hobart as large as the parent, and finer in every way. The flower in the lapel of the coat of Mr. Hooper as seen in the photo of this gentleman is not a Bonnaffon, nor a Timothy Eaton, but is the new sport of Hannah Hobart, yet unnamed, and for which we suggest the name "Hooper" or Whopper, for it is large and fine. ROSE GROWING.

By G. Emil Anderson.

[Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, April 23.]

Mr. President and Gentlemen: I was asked to read a paper this evening on rose growing. To grow good roses we must start out with good young stock and good soil. The soil, I believe, should be prepared during the fall, put up in heaps, say about 18 inches high, then 6 inches of cow manure and then another 12 to 18 inches of soil with a layer of manure on top, then leave lie during the winter until the frost is out, when it should be turned over and be broken up. Now the soil is ready for use.

When throwing out the old plants the benches should be cleaned off and a good coat of hot limewash applied to the boards, unless tile is used for benches. Then all dirt and rubbish should be cleaned out from underneath the benches. Now we are ready for wheeling in the soil which is quite a tiresome job (but we might live to see the automobile used for that purpose). The soil should be well chopped up when leveled off the benches, and then comes the planting. The plants should be well watered in the morning so that every plant is wet through; in case a few should be dry they should be set aside or dipped in a bucket of water. Then plant 15 inches apart for Brides, Maids, Meteors, Gates, Kaiserins; the Beauties require 18 inches apart to give necessary air circulation around the plants throughout the season. Press the soil down firmly with the hands around the plants, then give a good watering but only around the plants, not watering the whole bed. Then syringe the plants one or two times a day according to the weather; water only when the plants are dry.

In about two or three weeks the weeds are up, then go over the benches and loosen up the soil. The plants will now show good growth and will take a little more water, but water only around the plants for at least two months, cut all buds off with two to three leaves. Now give a good watering all over the benches and get ready to stake and tie. Now if flowers are wanted the buds can be left on but be careful in cutting the flowers not to cut the plants into the bones. Give all the air possible and the ventilators must be strictly attended to; not to open the whole ventilation at once, but a little at a time and lowered the same way; if not, the mildew will soon appear.

During the hot weather the walks in the greenhouse should be dampened down to keep the air moist around the plants. Fumigate on any cold, cloudy evening to keep down the aphis but do not fumigate too strong; open the ventilators about two or three hours after if the temperature is too high. Keep the soil worked up and attend to the tying. As soon as the nights get chilly make a little fire and turn on a steam pipe, put a little sulphur on the pipe and now be careful about the ventilation. Do not close down the houses in order to save a few shovelfuls of coal, but leave a crack of air on all night. Do not dampen down the walks any more; syringe only on bright sunny days; examine the soil before watering and let the plants get on the dry side, then water good.

Some growers cut out all the bliud wood in fall, but I think that it is wrong, as the days are getting shorter with little or no sunshine, not much air can be given and the plants seem to lose part of their life. Therefore the wood should be left on the plants to help keep the roots active. As long as there is good root action there is life and growth.

Those houses that were planted before June would stand a light mulching of well rotted cow manure about September first. Those planted later, I think, are better off with a scattering of bonemeal about October first. I do not believe in mulching with cow manure during the short days, as the manure will keep the soil in a sour, soggy condition for several days after each watering. If manure water is obtainable, I think once every two weeks is not too much if the plants are in a good, vigorous growth. Bonemeal, wood ashes and lime are good during mid-winter, but must be used with judgment. About the middle of January the days are starting to get longer and brighter and a light mulching of manure can then be put on unless manure water is used.

Fumigating should be attended to every week. There is quite a difference of opinion about fumigating Brides and Maids. Some growers fumigate in the morning, as the Maids have a tendency to lose their color, but I think that is a big mistake, because I have found that the flowers cut right after the fumigating will keep that nasty odor of tobacco smoke for some time and the customers as a rule have a habit of putting the flowers up to their noses as soon as they get hold of them, and they want the fragrance as well as the flower. I have found by fumigating in the evening when I watered, the buds being tight, that towards morning the smoke has disappeared and the flowers have gradually opened, the fragrance is there and they lose very little of their color.

Another important thing is to have a good night fireman as soon as fire is needed. Many good rose houses get checked the first cool nights, and it often times takes a good while before they start out again. Many old growers who ought to know better let their rose houses drop down to between 40 and 50 degrees, and I have seen the plants in the morning as wet from moisture as if they were being syringed, and yet I was told that it would do the plants good to get them hardened off. It will pay any grower to get a fireman that knows how to fire; not one who is a good coal shoveler, but one that knows how to keep a steady fire and an even temperature in the houses. Most of the greenhouse firemen like to stuff the boiler as full of coal as they can and then lie down for a while and keep that up through the night, sometimes never to look into the houses. Such a man will damage the stock and burn coal for many times the amount that it would take to pay a good man who knows how to fire and keep the temperature right in the houses and there would be less of sickly plants and crippled flowers.

NARCISSUS HORSFIELDI

Among the many beautiful Trumpet, or Ajax, daffodils the bicolor forms always enjoy a large measure of popularity, for not only is the combination of white and yellow always good, but such combination nearly always carries with it an air of refinement not found in the more gorgeous golden daffodils. The two most popular bicolors for producing spring displays in the flower garden are Horsfieldi and Empress. These two are much alike, both having a large white perianth and yellow trumpet; but Horsfieldi is the earlier of the two, and has a paler trumpet than Empress. Both are sturdy growers, as also is bicolor Grandis (or Grandee), a still later variety, with a large deep yellow trumpet of fine form.

That Horsfieldi is a famous bedding variety will be generally conceded, but, if any should doubt its value, a visit to any of the larger public parks in the country during daffodil time should convince them. The accompanying illustration should also serve to carry conviction. It represents a large bed in Mr. Thomas Tatham's garden at Wilmslow, Cheshire. Eighteen hundred bulbs were planted in the autumn of 1899, and since then they have not been disturbed, but when the leaves die down in 1902 the bulbs will be lifted and sorted ready for replanting. Upon the boldness with which Mr. Tatham planted this variety, and upon the effect secured, he deserves the heartiest congratulation. We also tender him our sincere thanks for the excellent photograph from which our illustration has been reproduced.—Gardeners' Magazine.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The wholesale cut flower market gave evidence of life again during the past week. Prices were better maintained and stock averaged excellent in quality, the season considered. Weather conditions have been favorable, and the excessive hot spell of the West has not materialized here. What those genial florists of Omaha and Kansas City have been doing to deserve 100 degrees in the shade so early in the year it is hard for us who know them to understand.

Lilies are everywhere since Easter in great abundance. Noticed the supply at Charles Millang's, especially, crowding his store and windows and maintaining his reputation as "the lily king." Violets have felt the touch of the south wind's breath and begin to "fold their wings and silently steal away;" $3 per 1,000 is adding insult to injury. Bulbous stock and sweet peas are excellent and not overplentiful, and lily of the valley, when at its best, is valued at $4 per 100. Roses are deteriorating slowly, though some grand stock still reaches the market, and carnations are as long stemmed and as much in demand as ever.

Notes.

The moving day of the old East Thirty-fourth Street Market, May 1, to its new home on West Twenty-sixth street and Sixth avenue promises to be a gala event with ceremonies and celebrations appropriate to the occasion. This will be a busy corner from now on, with its two immense floors devoted to floricultural interests, and its bowling and other kindred facilities for leisure hours.

Friends of Mr. William Plumb will be glad to know that he has taken the management of his old place at Oyster Bay and has fully recovered his health. He intends building a range of greenhouses this season.

The auction sales of plants at Elliott's and Cleary's continue twice weekly. Buyers are numerous and prices excellent. It is difficult to realize the extent of this industry without being an eye-witness of its magnitude and the crowds that attend.

The florist supply season here has been a great success. Every one of the establishments in that line in New York report their largest year's business to date. Mr. Kreshover tells me: "It's a constant hustle to keep pace with the orders," and that his business grows beyond his expectations.

Mr. Alex. J. Guttman opens May 1 at 49 Broad street, in the heart of the Wall street district close to the U. S. Treasury and Stock Exchange and the great offices of J. P. Morgan and Henry Clews & Co., a retail florist establishment that cannot fail to be a great success. It will be elaborately fitted up in keeping with its location and the bulls and bears of Wall street will have an excellent and convenient outlet for some of their daily profits, and great flower buyers they are when things go their way. Mr. Guttman is very popular with his brother florists and everybody predicts his success and wishes him well. Mr. Ladiges, for years with Fleischmann, will manage the enterprise.

Visitors have been quite nummerous lately, and some from afar; among them, J. H. Sievers, from San Francisco, and E. G. Hill, from Indiana.

The Newport season promises to be early and strenuous. Wadley & Smythe, Siebrecht & Sons and the Hodgson Co. are well under way with preparations for their openings there. The first of these have just filled an order for $2,000 worth of palms for the new mansion of Clarence McKay on Long Island.

The retail stores everywhere in the city have brilliant spring windows, some of them very charming and attractive.

The exodus to Europe is great and growing and the demand for farewell floral greetings encouraging to the retailers. These are sent generally loose, the formal baskets and set pieces of other days gradually becoming obsolete and unpopular.

Dailledouze Bros., of Flatbush, have added to their establishment the property adjoining, owned for many years by Joseph Gard, one of the pioneers of that neighborhood.

H. C. Steinhoff & Son, of West Hoboken, are enjoying the rest those 10,000 Easter Crimson Ramblers afforded and will combine business and pleasure with a month's trip to the Windward Islands, Porto Rico and Bermuda.

Mansfield, of Lexington avenue, has the branch microbe, and illustrates it by purchasing the store of G. A. Nicholas, on Seventh avenue. Mr. Nicholas has the Western fever and soon leaves for his ranch in Oklahoma.

Louis Schmutz, Sr., has been having a tussle with his old enemy, rheumatism, and it has taken another fall out of him. It will take more than common, ordinary rheumatism to keep Louis away from Asheville and the angels' feet.

Paul M. Pierson, Lincoln Pierson, Wm. Sefton, L. M. Noe and Chas. G. Hunter are the incorporators of the Pierson, Sefton Co., of Madison, N. J., with a capital of $85,000.

John H. Taylor, of Bayside, has had a sorer experience than the prevalent check swindler, a measly thief having appropriated his horse, wagon and appurtenances last Wednesday evening.

On May 14 and 15 the Horticultural Society of New York will give an exhibition at the Botanical Garden that promises to be of great interest. Dr. Britton's lecture on New Zealand, with stereoptieon exhibits, will be a feature of the event. AUSTIN.

BOSTON.

Week Ending April 19.

I think it was a very good week myself, but I heard some squealing among both the growers and the retailers concerning hardships in the business. Well, each one sees the drawbacks in his own business plainest, and generally imagines the other fellow is having the easiest time. It is well, however, to remember the dangers of "fleeing from the evils we have to those we wot not of," which old saying never was so true as since business competition became so acute.

The almanac seems to have got slightly rattled and mixed up "ult." and "inst.," so that old Father Time can hardly know his own children, but things are getting slightly more April-like and the flowers are showing it. They are arising to the occasion very fragrantly! Beauties, Liberties, Jacks, Brunners, Meteors, Goulds, Carnots, Maids, Brides, Perles, all kinds of pinks, about all kinds of bulb material, lilies, snap dragon, violets, etc. You can mix this list all up and name it over and over again in different ways and there will be goods enough to supply each list. Prices are wavering; growers call them low, but buyers robustly pronounce them exorbitantly high. And "when doctors disagree who shall decide?"

Come and buy!

Items.

Those Carnots of John McFarlane's are all right.

Violets are not overplentiful, but there are some quite good ones.

The auction sales of plants, etc., are progressing finely. Somebody has money yet.

Walter Mott, of the Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co., Jamestown, N. Y., was a recent visitor.

George Ward, Beverley Cove, has purchased real estate on North street, Salem, upon which he will immediately erect a range of five or six good houses with glass shingles. J. S. Manter.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market holds fairly well, in view of the change to genuine spring weather. Prices have declined a little; the best Beauties are $3 a dozen; tea roses, $6 to $8 a hundred; carnations, $2 to $3 a hundred. There are a few sales of fancy stock at higher prices than the above. Double violets, Lady Campbell, can still be had at from 50 to 75 cents a hundred. Single violets and Southern daffodils are about over. Sweet peas are in demand at 60 to 75 cents a hundred; an example of how well choice stock pays is shown by the price obtained for some long-stemmed white sweet peas of choice quality—it was $2 a hundred. The quantity of stock coming in is diminishing, but it is amply sufficient to meet the demand.

Independence Square.

The display of flowering bulbs in the city squares is at its best this week. The beds in front of the State House are especially showy. The largest has a central figure formed of Keizerskroon tulips, surrounded by a band of white tulips bordered by a band of purple hyacinths; around this, but divided by a setting of grass, is a curved bed of double daffodils winding in and out among smaller beds of various colored hyacinths; beyond come two great triangles of pink, white and purple hyacinths, and near to the State House are two great ovals of double daffodils bordered by purple hyacinths. This combination of the royal colors, purple and gold, is very rich. The bulbs have produced uniformly good flowers, reflecting credit on City Forester Lewis and Seedsman Michell. The only drawback to the general effect is the condition of the grass, which is very poor.

The Seed Houses.

The seedsmen are in the midst of a great rush of business. They all agree that they are doing more than they ever did before. Henry A. Dreer Co. have noticed an increased demand for the best roses in pots; those selling at 40 cents each are wanted in preference to those at 25 cents each or less; their customers have tired of little plants that take so long to grow. They have also done extremely well with hardy phlox in 3-inch pots; these plants were formerly offered with single stems, "Japanese match sticks," so to speak; that stage has now been passed. This season they had 50,000 nice stocky threes, with four to five shoots each. The Transvaal daisy has taken well, the stock being practically exhausted.

Johnson & Stokes have moved a great quantity of small vegetable plants from W. P. Stokes' place at Moorestown, besides largely increasing their seed business. The place of honor in their catalogue is given to Spark's Earlyanna tomato, considered the most prolific variety in cultivation. It is having a great sale.

Henry F. Michell received very encouraging accounts of the bulbs he furnished last fall. F. G. Burger, of Baltimore, who was in town this week, says that the display in that city has never been equaled. A feather in H. F. M.'s cap.

There are some fine specimens of Cineraria stellata in front of the seed stores.

Notes.

Fred Ehret has experienced his best season since entering the commission field about fourteen years ago. He started with two good consignors, Palmer of Langhorne and Hillburn of Newtown, and has steadily increased his field since. His reputation, especially for Brides and Maids, has enabled him to get better prices for his best stock this season than ever before.

W. A. Leonard is sending in some very fine Kaiserin to S. S. Pennock.

Edwin Lonsdale is busily distributing young plants of the new rose, Ivory; one firm alone has taken 23,000 young plants of this variety.

I neglected to mention last week that the Germantown Horticultural Society's certificate of merit was awarded to the American Rose Co. for Ivory.

A series of entertainments given by the Russian officers on board the new battleship culminated in a reception given last week. The ship was handsomely decorated throughout and each fair guest was presented with a tastefully arranged bunch of flowers adorned by a ribbon bearing the battleship's name in Russian characters. The work was done by H. H. Battles.

The Bowlers' League banquet arranged for this week has been changed to a baseball game and planked shad dinner at Essington the second week in May.

BUFFALO.

It's a long time, Mr. Editor, since your correspondent sent you any news of this rural town. The water is still flowing over Niagara's cliff to the north of us, and the steel plant a few miles to the south has added fifteen millions more to its capital, making a forty million dollar plant. So being between these natural and human-made wonders we are doing fairly well.

Winter lingered long in the lap of spring and it is only for a week past that we have had decent weather, with frosty sidewalks every morning. And millions of icebergs of various dimensions from Duluth and other towns passing our doors day and night for weeks past, how can we be warm? In fact the lumps of ice going down Niagara River have so impeded ferryboat navigation between Buffalo and Fort Erie, D. C., that no important prize fights have been scheduled for any dates of late. This is lamentable, yet it has not affected the general business of Ontario or Erie county.

We are entirely satisfied with business since Easter; to compare it with last year would not be fair, for it was Pan-American of happy memory, but we are sure that this spring is much in advance of all other years. There is a great awakening here among our people who have comfortable homes—and nearly all who can have detached residences with more or less garden and lawn to embellish their surroundings with trees and shrubs and vines and herbaceous borders. There are lots of openings and opportunities for men who will cater to these wants, but it takes more thought and knowledge and intelligence than it does to make a wreath of flowers or plant a bed of geraniums or even grow good carnations or roses, and the profit is correspondingly greater. We have a great army of young florists in this country who are experts either behind the counter or in the greenhouse, but not many gardeners. You will say trees, shrubs and herbaceous plants is the nurseryman's business. So it is, to raise them, but few nurserymen want to bother with the retail business, nor can they send competent men to plant the goods they have sold, and the tree peddler, the nurseryman's agent, has no object but to sell, and the people know it and will always turn to the local man if he can give intelligent advice and deliver the goods.

There has been no surplus of flowers of any kind of late. Even carnations, usually so abundant about this time, are always cleaned up, and both roses and carnations have commanded a good price, particularly when you have to buy them, and incidentally Billy Kasting is getting fat.

I can't think of all the illustrious people who have called lately. There was the classical George Fancourt and rotundant Peter Crowe, on their return from the Canadian growers. Peter shook his sides with jokes and George was so loftily eloquent in quoting the sayings of "Lady Deadlock" from "Bleak House" that I could glean but little from them of what they saw, but they both gasped and took another when they said, "You ought to see the latest addition to the Dale place; four houses, each 800 by 30, with no partitions; a field of roses and grand." Mr. Creighton, representing Henry A. Dreer, was here. "He's all right," a first-class representative of a first-class house.

While we were ruminating how to rid a plot of ground of superfluous stones a stranger walked up and introduced himself as Mr. Sievers, of San Francisco. We consider it a great honor that he should travel some 50 miles out of his way just to have an hour's chat, and we appreciate it. Mr. Sievers raised Ethel Crocker, Carl and several later varieties, which he grows to an immense size. I hope some of them we can grow as he does. It is a great pleasure to talk to such a traveled man, and young men in your teens and a little older, if you don't realize that we are moving along, just think of the remark of Mr. Sievers while we were discussing a leg of mutton. "I went to California in '57 and have never been east since, though I have been to the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands, South America and Mexico. I was 180 days going from Bremen to San Francisco, 18 days beating off Cape Horn. Now I could leave San Francisco and be in Europe in 12 days."

The outrageous rise in beef and its sympathetic effect on carnivorous food, including eggs and "bow wow" sausage, has driven us in the rural districts to a strictly vegetable diet, in consequence of which there is no palatable rat free lunch in our house, so the rodents have left the cottage and invaded the carnation houses. They jump up and bite off the buds just as they are about to expand, nibble off the calyx, scatter the petals and feast on the seed pod. I have tried to give you a few hints on various topics in the past, won't some good brother florist tell me how to drive them (the rats) over to my neighbors? I have tried "Rough On Rats," a perfect misnomer, and

"Skat-rat" and several kinds of traps, and can't swear that any rat has been hurt except two that I bowled over with a shotgun in true George Anderson style. Perhaps the tariff on meat will be lowered so that we can get Canadian beef and mutton of the Argentine and Australia, which is sold in the cities of Europe for one-half what we pay. Perhaps if the meat trust would not mind this little breach of the glorious principle of protection, we could again find use for our canine teeth and both we and the rats would resume our normal diet.

Mr. W. Adams, 479 Main street, has been struggling along for some time, and finally decided last week to give up business. He gave a bill of sale of his assets to his heaviest creditor, Mr. Kasting, and we hope there will be something left for us. Andy tried hard to carry the load, but it was a dull winter. He is engaged to be head clerk for S. A. Anderson, across the street. The new occupants of the store have brushed up and fixed up, and are carrying a big stock, and it looks bright. Their name I will give you later. W. S.

BALTIMORE.

Various Items.

Trade for the season of the year has been and continues in good shape. The wedding crop after Easter was large and fairly profitable, and the end is not yet. Violets have dropped out of the market, and daffodils and narcissus are in oversupply. Shippers from Virginia are sending quantities which cannot be absorbed. Carnations continue of good quality, but the supply is deficient, and roses are plentiful enough for all requisitions and of tolerable quality. Harrisii and callas are in abundant supply and greens are short. For two weeks we have had typical spring weather, though the season up to this writing (April 21) is backward. Today the mercury stood at 70 degrees.

The Gardeners' Club at a recent meeting took up with some show of indignation a practice alleged to exist of plants and flowers from the city parks being furnished for weddings and other occasions, but the matter seems to have been dropped.

At the last meeting the president of the State Agricultural College and the director of the Experimental Station exploited these institutions, which are under one management. The former is one of the "land-grant" colleges and the two have an endowment of nearly $540,000 a year from the United States, most, if not all, of which goes for salaries. The state also liberally aids from the public purse, and there is an abundant foundation for carrying on a useful work in agriculture and horticulture, which, however, has little practical realization. Instead of a school where intending farmers are prepared for the work awaiting them, the influences are such that they are directed, rather, away from the farm. During ten years of the existing administration no mark that can be seen has been made toward the improvement of our farm practice by the contribution of bright, talented and thoroughly educated young men to the ranks of the agriculturists of the state. Few take the agricultural ecurse, the graduates being trained for, and going into, the professions. So far as horticulture is concerned the result is epitomized by the American Agriculturist, whose editor had exceptional opportunity to see and judge of its work, which says: "In experimentation along horticultural lines the college and station have done nothing worthy of favorable comment in ten years, and it is estimated $20,000 to $30,000 has been expended on that department in that period."

The college was a supplicant to the recent legislature for an appropriation of $60,000. It got $38,000 for new buildings (though what they are needed for is problematical, as the attendance is said to be much less than a few years ago, and mainly made up of boys in a preparatory school or the lowest classes), on conditions that may not be met, as a private interest is required to be mortgaged (which means its annihilation) and which will be resisted. The large annual appropriations desired were not granted, and the legislature ordered a commission of its members to investigate the college and its methods with a view to having it take its proper place as a technical school.

The intelligence of those in control is illustrated by the original bill which was introduced, providing among other things for the establishment of an "insectory," a glass house for plant-pathology, etc. No one, so far, has been able to guess what an "insectory" is.

Frederick C. Bauer has added to his place near Govanstown an acre and a half of eligibly located land, which squares out his establishment very handsomely. He is making the best use of it, and it will tell to his profit.

Robert L. Graham has found the olive branches so numerous which cluster around his hearthstone (do such branches cluster around hearthstones?) that he has abandoned the house adjoining his greenhouse and moved stocks and branches into a villa on a neighboring avenue. R.

ST. LOUIS.

Since my last report trade has been rather slow, but the end of the week it was somewhat better, with plenty of funeral work, and with plenty of flowers in the market to make it with. The report from most of the retailers and wholesalers is that they have more flowers than customers. A full supply of all varieties is being received, and roses are badly overstocked and greatly in excess of demand. The price on them can hardly be quoted, and only the first-class stock brings anything near what it is worth, and that is from $5 to $6 per 100; as for the others, any old price will buy them. Good long Beauties are more plentiful now and bring from $2 to $3 per doz., with plenty of shorts at $4 and $5 per 100.

Carnations are also inclined to be overplentiful in all sorts, and whites were more plentiful than at any time during the season, still the demand for them is good. The Chicago Carnation Co.'s stock continues to head the list of fancies in the market, while some of our local growers are also sending in fine stock of all kinds. Overman's Flora Hill and Dunford's Scott are much looked after. The price on these fancies is from $2.50 to $3; good carnations bring $2, and the common in bulk go at $1 per 100; the latter are sold only to the fakirs.

Quotations on bulbous stock the early part of the past week are impossible, as lots of this truck was dumped. The bulk of this stock now comes up from the south. Harrisii lilies are extremely plentiful and it is impossible to hold them at any regular figure; same may be said of callas.

Sweet peas are coming in more plentifully and will no doubt soon overstock the market along with the other flowers. At present the price is from 25 to 50 cents per 100.

Lilac is up from the south, but comes in bad shape and the shipper hardly gets more than express charges out of it. All kinds of green have had a good call the past week.

Dealers at Union market again report a fine trade for last week, and express their opinion that this will be the best season for some time back. Plenty of plant peddlers are seen now in the residential districts, with plants of all kinds, and lots of planting out is now going on in that part of the city.

Mr. Andrew Peterson (brother of our friend Swan) of Paxton, Ill., was a visitor last week, calling on friends in the trade.

Henry Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., reports trade good in all its branches with them, and especially so in wedding decorations and funeral work.

Oscar Heile, the South Broadway florist, has been doing a heavy business of late in funeral work.

Things are progressing nicely for the largest flower show ever held. Those who have the matter in hand will hold a meeting this week, and they say they will stop at nothing to surpass anything ever attempted in this country.

The Bowling Club.

The Bowling Club rolled three games Monday night at the Planters' Hotel alleys. Ellison, scratch man, was high, closely followed by Ellis and Weber. Just as soon as the spring rush is over the full membership will roll. It can hardly be expected of the greenhouse men to come down during their busy season.

The scores were as follows :

Names.	H	1	2	3	Total	Av.
A. Y. Ellison	0	154	236	170	560	186
F. M. Ellis.....	35	202	161	190	553	184
F. C. Weber.....	31	168	193	174	535	178
Will Adels	30	178	174	171	523	174
Theo. Miller	35	158	137	197	492	164
John Kunz	26	172	170	170	487	163
C. A. Kuehn	6	148	172	157	477	159

Our attention is called to the fact that one Theo. Lang, captain of the New York Florists' Bowling Club, has challenged any individual bona fide florist connected with any florist bowling team, for a purse of $25. I would say that I could name a dozen such men who could take up the challenge and give Captain Lang a little handicap. We have in St. Louis three—Ellison, Kuehn and Beyer—who would be glad to take it up at any time. Then Chicago has three or four. But what's the matter with George Moss, of Philadelphia, who is close by? I wish we were as close as he and we would part the Captain from some of his wealth.

FINE PANSIES.

Mr. I. E. Coburn, Everett, Mass., sends us a box containing several hundred pansy blooms. They are an exceedingly choice lot, the colors and markings indicating that Mr. Coburn has a very fine strain of pansies. Size and substance are also good, showing that Mr. Coburn knows how to grow pansies as well as how to select the most desirable strains of seed. We extend our congratulations and our thanks for the pleasure of enjoying such a fine collection of beautiful flowers.

THE AIR-ROOTS OF ORCHIDS.

The spongy covering of the roots of epiphytal orchids is generally considered as affording a means of absorbing watery vapor. Moreover, they have been considered to have the power of condensing watery vapor, and thus supplying the plant with liquid water. M. Nabokikh, a Russian naturalist, according to the Revue Horticole, does not adopt this view, but considers that the spongy coat has the function of protecting the roots against the ill effects of too low a night temperature. Again, the reservoirs for air, "pneumatodes," which occur in the spongy tissue, supply the living tissues with air during the dampest portion of the year. Without the presence of these "pneumatodes," the roots would be suffocated by excess of water and deficiency of air.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Ralph A. Richardson, a young man of 20 years, former inmate of the I. S. & S. O. Home at Knightstown, and for several years a resident of this city, committed suicide on April 17 by swallowing strychnine. He had at various times worked on most of the florists' places in and around this city and was up to the last day employed at the Central Indiana Insane Hospital. He was very favorably known to nearly every florist in this city for his willingness and good-heartedness. No one seems to know the immediate cause for his rash act, as he had a very bright future before him. A. B.

Eldora, Ia.—Mr. S. C. Polland, the florist, of Allegheny, Pa., and Miss J. Pool, of this place, were married here April 9.

CINCINNATI.

Various Items.

Summer has come in upon us seemingly overnight, for to-day at noon the thermometer registered 82 degrees in the shade, and the end is not yet. Well, we have had a good stiff winter and warm weather is welcomed, even though we know how it uses up stock. Even now roses are showing the effects of the hot sun.

Really good stock in roses is scarce. Meteors are coming in in increased quantities and there are not so many bullheads. Liberty, too, is coming in in much greater quantities, and, while the color is not quite up to standard, it is nevertheless, a first-class rose, and, if you know how to grow it, it is ahead of Meteor by far.

Carnations are scarce in all colors and all grades, and this has been the case all season. Growers are very busy now planting out their carnations in the field, and a few have finished. The weather has been good for this kind of work, but at present a good rain would not be amiss.

Prices on all stocks are about the same as quoted last week. General business has been first-class and, notwithstanding rather unfavorable weather, stock was cleared out nicely. Of course carnations being scarce were the best stock, but roses sold well also, there being plenty of them to fill all orders. Bulbous stock showed a tendency to drag, and some of it remained unsold, but there was a very large quantity of it in sight, and things might have been worse.

The bulbous stock in our parks is in bloom and it is a grand sight. On the small amount of money that Park Superintendent B. P. Critchell has at his disposal he has done exceedingly well, and is receiving just praise from the public.

Max Rudolph is building three greenhouses, each 100 feet long. When completed there will be eight houses in his plant.

Benson Bros. have opened a branch on Fourth street. There are already five stores on this street within two squares, and all seem to be doing a good business.

Dock Sunderbruch has been appointed receiver for the Clifton Rose Houses.

Mrs. G. R. Foster, Cynthiana, Ky., was a visitor. C. J. Ohmer.

PORTLAND, OREGON.

Buell Lamberson's Sons report a large trade in roses this year and say this city is making quite an effort to acquire the title the "Roso City" of the United States. An Eastern nursery firm is seeking to place a contract for the growing of 20,000 roses with a local nurseryman, and it is anticipated that in future this city will supply many large Eastern concerns.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Market conditions remain much the same as last week, with prices somewhat easier on roses. Excellent roses can be had at $4 to $5, and select at $6, while for lower grades all sorts of prices prevail. In Beauties the best are held at $3 a dozen, but cull shorts are sold at as low as $1 to $2.50 per 100. Carnation prices are rather better held; $1 to $2 for good and $3 for fancy are the prevailing rates, with whites still in best demand.

Lilac from the South has made its appearance, Kennicott Bros. Co. receiving a large consignment Tuesday. It was in good shape and sold well.

The weather continued cool till Monday, and then the thermometer rose suddenly to the eighties. Tuesday afternoon came a much needed rain and cooler temperature. Just what effect these sudden changes will have on stock remains to be seen.

Local retailers generally report trade quiet, but shipping demand has so far kept up well for the season.

Various Items.

Wednesday evening the regular meeting of the Florists' Club was devoted to roses. The leading feature of the program was a paper by G. E. Anderson, which appears elsewhere in this issue.

Edwin Eagle is moving his greenhouse stock to a new location at Seventy-ninth street and Bond avenue. He will retain the store at Fifty-seventh street and Lake avenue.

Joseph Fleischman sends us a note stating that rumors having been circulated to the effect that it is intended to discontinue the Chicago store, he wishes to contradict them as untrue. He adds: "It certainly must be known by this time that the success of the business is without question, and we hope to continue doing business at the old stand for a long period."

In the Deutsche Gaertner-Zeitung of October 19 last appeared an illustration and description of a house of chrysanthemums at the establishment of Otto Mailander, Sacrau, bei Breslau. Mr. Mailander's former acquaintances in the trade in this city will no doubt be pleased to learn his present address, that they may forward their compliments individually or collectively.

In the parks the scillas and crocuses are past their best, the hyacinths are beginning to bloom and the tulips are pushing up their buds. The red growths of the paeonies are prominent in the herbaceous borders. The leaf buds on the trees are partly opened and a few days of real spring weather would bring out their full beauty.

Mr. John H. Sievers, of San Francisco, is in the city, making a stop on his way home from the East, where he visited the leading members of the trade. This was, curiously enough, his first visit to the Atlantic coast. He went from Europe direct to San Francisco in 1857 by the way of Cape Horn, and has never before crossed the continent. He speaks in high terms of the cordial welcome given him everywhere by those in the trade. He says California will soon send the East some new carnations that will be much more valuable than Ethel Crocker and his other introductions.

Mr. C. L. Washburn returned from the South Tuesday.

Mr. A. Herrington, Madison, N.J., sent some blooms of the Transvaal daisy, Gerbera Jamesoni, for display at the meeting of the Florists' Club Wednesday evening.

Bowling.

The games on Friday, April 17, resulted in the Ashlands defeating the Florists two out of three games by the following scores:

THE ELM LEAF BEETLE.

Bulletin No. 15 of the New England Association of Park Superintendents is devoted to the elm leaf beetle and contains a large amount of valuable information regarding this pest. We print below one communication that appears in it, and that tells of the best methods of combating this dangerous insect.

The beetles are at the present time in hibernation in old buildings, garrets, chimneys, old trees, under the shingles, etc., but never, as we can discover, in the ground. They escape from their winter quarters during May and fly about, alighting on the young and tender elm leaves, eating holes through them, so that in June a badly infested tree looks as if it had been riddled with fine shot. During the month of June, the insect deposits her eggs in little clusters, generally on the under-side of the leaf; she then disappears and is seen no more. Early in July these eggs hatch out a larva, and the havoc begins, the foliage of the trees are skeletonized, which weakens the tree to such an extent that to repeat it for several years must kill the tree. In ten days' time the larva has become fully grown and crawls toward the ground. And if they do not find a crevice or loose bark to hide under, they must come to the ground where they gather in little heaps near trunks of trees. And they must lie there inanimate from one to two weeks, while they are being transformed to the beetle, after which they fly away, and do no further damage during the season, for in our vicinity we have only one generation per year.

The simple process is: Smooth the trunk of the tree and kill the pest while lying dormant at its base. It will only require four weeks, and the expense would be trifling in comparison to the loss of the noble elms throughout the city. Spraying obnoxious mixtures upon the foliage will help, but it is expensive and could not, we think, be done thoroughly enough to obtain the desired results.

The principal reasons for smoothing the trees are, that nearly all the larvae that find a lodging place upon them are successfully transformed, while a very small per cent of those on the ground succeed in becoming beetles; and seeondly, it makes them come to the ground where it is easy to kill them.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Since Easter the demand for high-grade roses and carnations has in no way diminished, with prices fair and steady. Owing to the increased supply of Beauties prices have taken quite a drop. Bulbous stock and violets are nearly out of the market. Some belated lilies are now in evidence; there is little demand for them. Field planting of carnations will be started by some of the growers this week, but as we usually experience a sharp frost about the first week of May, others will defer planting till after that date. Joplin, Mo.—A. Hershey has bought from Henderson & Sims the greenhouse and stock formerly belonging to Thos. Green, and has moved the whole to 1122 Maffet avenue, where he has erected a modern house.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

Tree-Ferns.—If the stems are newly imported, stand them upright in pots, large enough to accommodate the butt-ends, filling in around them with loam and peat in roughish lumps, sand, crocks, or sandstone, and make the mass somewhat solid; having done that, place them in an intermediate-house, or other glass house, having a night temperature not lower than 48 degrees to 50 degrees, nor higher than 70 degrees, and keep the stems wet by syringing them twice a day.

Chrysanthemum Sports.—Mr. Lange, of the Handsworth Road Nursery, Hampton, sends us a single plant with four separate stems, each terminated by a single bloom, and bearing respectively yellow, bronze, pink, and white flowers. The variety is Gustav Grunerwald. The variation is in color only.

Chrysanthemum Maximum "Lord Roberts."—The varieties of Chrysanthemum maximum have become so numerous that some discrimination is necessary in selecting only the best. The variety under notice is new, and one of the finest yet raised. It commences to flower about the end of the month of May, and continues till frost stops all further development. The blossoms are remarkable for their size, the diameter of a good specimen exceeding 4 inches, and the petals broader than those of the older forms; it is pure white, and the yellow disc is not large or conspicuous as in those. The plant succeeds in any garden soil if in good condition, and it is readily increased by division in autumn or spring.

Leaf-Miners in Marguerites.—Insecticides are of no avail. You must pinch the grubs under the thumb-nail when there are but few of them, or cut off the leaves and burn them if too numerous to destroy by the first method. When the insect is on the wing the deposition of eggs may be prevented by the use of quassia-water. The same fly infests chrysanthemums, cinerarias, senecios, etc.

Streptosolen Jamesoni.—While visiting the gardens of A. H. Harman, Esq., Lower Greyswood, Haslemere, I was much struck with a fine display of Streptosolen Jamesoni in one of the greenhouses. The plants were over 9 feet high, growing in 10-inch pots, and clothed from top to bottom with fine trusses of bloom. Mr. Harris, the head gardener, informed me that he struck cuttings of this plant each year in the spring, and grew them on without pinching.

Shedding of Hyacinth Flowers.—A correspondent sends us several specimens in which the spike falls off in the most disappointing way. It is not at all uncommon, and is the result of irregular or disproportionate growth. The flower-stalk grows too fast, and is nipped off at the base by the unyielding scales of the bulb, between which it is thrust up.

Allamanda Williamsii.—If you cannot afford the plant the fullest amount of sunshine, and train it not less than a foot distant from the roof-glass, it will not flower satisfactorily. In order to flower it early, a start should have been made early in January. Allamandas last five to six months in bloom. Young plants struck from cuttings last year cannot be expected to flower much this year, indeed it would be better to remove the flowers.

To Render Raffia More Durable.—It is well known that, although raffia has many good points, it has the fault of soon decaying from damp. We now learn that this fault can be overcome by sulphuring the material, i. e., exposing it to the fumes of burning sulphur in a close chest or room, and its durability increased sevenfold.

DAPHNE ODORA.

Some few individuals of this old and fragrant species which flowers about Christmas, should be found in every greenhouse. The plant is generally grafted on stocks of D. laureola in March, though I have been fairly successful in growing them on their own roots by putting in during September slips 3 inches long, with a heel of older wood, in a mixture of sandy peat and loam, in thumb-pots. The slips should be placed against the side of the pot, afforded water, and put under a bell-glass in the greenhouse. They may take longer to form roots than in heat, but the plants are stronger and not so liable to decay; moreover, the plants are longer lived on their own roots than grafted plants. At Bicton the plant is used to cover a greenhouse back wall, where they succeed admirably, not being crowded with other plants; and for this purpose grafted plants are preferable, as they grow stronger. Nice little bushy specimens can be grown in 7-inch pots, in loam and peat in equal proportions, with enough silver sand and a small quantity of powdered brick-bat as will give porosity, potting firmly. Frequent repotting should be avoided so long as a plant is healthy.

Water must be applied only when it is wanted, as ill-health quickly follows excess of moisture at the root; and manures should be avoided. In the month of July, plants in pots are the better for being placed outdoors and gradually inured to full sunshine, plunged in a bed of coal-ashes.—J. Mayne, in Gardeners' Chronicle.

VALUABLE INFORMATION.

Is everything that appears in the daily papers as far away from the facts as the following, which appeared in a New York daily at Easter time?

PRICES OF EASTER BLOOMS FOR RICH AND POOR FOLKS.

WHAT THE RICH PAY.

Lilies in pots	$ 1.50
Roses, per dozen	25.00
Hyacinths in pots	5.00

WHAT THE POOR PAY.

Lilies in pots	.15
Roses, apiece	.05
Hyacinths in pots	.10

It well illustrates the knowledge possessed by some of the daily paper "critics" on plant values. The striving after the sensational becomes idiotic when indulged in by the ignorant space writer who doesn't know a geranium from a hyacinth. But who can tell how much damage such statements do the trade? Austin.

DUTY ON HOLLY BRANCHES.

By a decision of the United States general appraisers at New York, April 12, 1902, holly branches with the leaves and berries attached are entitled to entry as "Vegetable substances, crude or unmanufactured," under paragraph 617, and are free of duty. The collector had classed them as cuttings of ornamental trees and collected 25 per cent. ad valorem. His classification was overruled on protest to the appraisers by the importers.

PROPERTIES OF THE SWEET PEA.

The committee of the National Sweet Pea Society have had under consideration the necessity for drawing up some regulations in regard to the granting by the society of certificates of merit to any new varieties which may be deemed worthy of such an honor, and they have adopted as a basis for future action a schedule of properties as constituting quality in the sweet pea, as under—

1. Form.—The standard must be erect, waved, or only slightly hooded. The standard, wings, and keel to be in such proportion to each other as will constitute a harmonious and well-balanced flower.

2. Number of Blooms on a Stem.—No variety shall be recognized that has not at least three blooms on a stem gracefully disposed.

3. Color. Distinct and clear self colors are most to be desired, and, therefore, striped, watered, and edged flowers will not be awarded certificates of merit unless they present quite new or remarkable combinations.

4. Exceptions.—Perfectly distinct new colors, such as approaching the blue of Salvia patens, the yellow of Coreopsis grandiflora, or the scarlet of the zonal pelargonium, shall be recognized, even if the variety should fall short of the foregoing properties.—Gardeners' Magazine.

THE NEW COMMUTER.

Now the new commuter hies him to the seed store and proceeds
To give up his hard-earned money for the seeds he thinks he needs;
Now he buys a rake and trowel and some bulbs and eke a hoe,
And has visions of the flowers he will soon induce to grow.
He digs and plants and digs
Where the soil is rich and black,
And he straightens up anon
With a joint loose in his back.
He has clay upon his trousers, which are baggy at the knees,
But with dirt beneath his nails, he's still as happy as you please;
Though he's stiff from stooping over, oh, he needs the exercise,
And cares not that pains shoot through him every time he tries to rise.

Now the old commuter doesn't hustle out to buy a hoe;
He has given up some notions of a year or so ago;
Once he, too, was led to think that hoeing soil would do him good;
Once he pottered as he fancied every good commuter should,
But the weeds somehow would come
Where the flowers should have grown;
Only trash, it seemed, would spring
From the seed that he had sown.
So the happy old commuter gets his golf clubs out and goes
Gaily golfing o'er the hillocks where the west wind sweetly blows;
Oh, blithely he goes trudging, exercising all he can,
And he leaves the garden-making for the tired hired man.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

Ixias.—October is generally regarded as the best month in which to pot ixias. Place six or eight bulbs in a five-inch pot, affording good drainage and using a compost of loam and peat, or light loam and leaf soil, with sand. Cover the bulbs with about an inch of soil, and after potting, stand the pots on ashes in a cold frame, and give but little water during winter. As soon as growth appears, a light position on a shelf in a cool greenhouse will be suitable, giving water with care, so that the plants do not suffer either from drought or excess of moisture. Ixias are never a success when forced; indeed, they resent warm treatment, for they are all half-hardy, and in the southern counties or other warm parts they are quite hardy in light soils. After flowering, and when the leaves have finished growing, gradually withhold water; a cold frame will suit them, only putting the lights on in wet weather. When the bulbs have fully ripened, either lay the pots on their sides till autumn or shake out the bulbs, and store them in a cool cupboard.

Nitrogenous Manures For Sweet Peas.—Theoretically neither sweet peas nor culinary peas require nitrogenous fertilizers, as by means of special nodules on their roots they are able to draw supplies of nitrogen from the atmosphere. Practical gardeners are, however, mostly well aware that deeply trenched and heavily manured ground is the best for these crops, and that such rooting medium necessarily contains nitrogenous matter. Then also it has been found that for sweet peas an application of nitrate of soda at the rate of half an ounce per square yard is of great advantage as soon as the seedlings are well through the soil. This is quick acting and they then seem the better able to work for themselves as compared with others not treated. After this early application dressings of concentrated nitrogenous manures are best withheld.

Forcing German Irises.—Not only all the German irises, but nearly all allied rhizomatous kinds are amenable to gentle forcing when properly prepared for that purpose. The preparation consists in potting up sturdy pieces in spring, preferably just before flowering, and at the same time removing the flower spikes. These irises commence to grow and root freely about flowering time, and it is desirable that all this work should be done in the pots or pans, and not in the open ground. After potting plunge the pots in soil or ashes, up to the rim, water carefully, and give slight shade during the middle of the day for a week or so. Subsequently nothing beyond watering will be needed until early in the new year a portion of the batch is placed in a cool greenhouse, to be given a little more warmth as soon as the spikes appear. Well rooted specimens will appreciate a little liquid manure. Lifting and boxing clumps in the autumn, for forcing, is rather a wasteful method, as after such disturbance many of the growths refuse to flower when placed under glass.

Crete, Ill.—G. Heinrich intends to branch out and will open a store at Chicago Heights. Miss Anna Brockman will be in charge.

CLEAR CYPRESS ABSOLUTELY FREE OF SAP

It is just as essential in building to get good material, as it is to plant a house with good stock.

You cannot get a good cut of flowers from poor plants, neither can you build a substantial house from poor material.

We have made greenhouse construction a study.

You are welcome to the benefit of our wide experience.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Cold-Frames.

I would call this spring rather an early but cold one, and white frosts visit us frequently up to date. Yet with all that there are many things that are better out in frames than in the houses, and there is no time in the whole year when a square foot of bench room is more eagerly sought for. Among the things that should be in a cold frame—always considering that you have a good, tight sash and dry bottom for the plants to stand on or be plunged in—are pyrethrums, carnations (unless they are in the ground, which they should be at once), all the bedding roses you expect to sell or are selling, such as Soupert, Mme. Cochet, Agrippina, etc., young dahlias (for they like to be cool, but not a degree of frost must touch them), Centaurea gymnocarpa, in fact, anything you know that is not hurt at a temperatutre of 40 degrees at night, and as important as any of these are the little asters that have lately been transplanted into flats from the seed pans.

To digress a moment let me say that we are apt to think the seedling aster, phlox, marigold, etc., at 20 to 25 cents a dozen a rather bothersome business. If you will look into the number of dozens that you sell from a square foot you will discover that you have received more money, twice over, from these seedlings per foot than the expert carnation grower has taken from his carnation benches, and the latter you have been a whole year cultivating and the asters but two months. There is of course a limit to the quantity sold, yet there is always a great demand for good asters.

Hotbeds.

Your hotbeds, if you have to bother with them, are by this time filled with verbenas, alternantheras, tuberous-rooted begonias for bedding, sweet alyssum, small pots of mignonette, variegated and bronze geraniums, etc. The plants just mentioned can be grown in these primitive greenhouses far better than they can in any greenhouse, even with the best of management. I always say a mild hotbed, by that I mean 15 to 18 inches of heating material well firmed with six inches of loam on top for plunging. You are not forcing cucumbers or melons, but only require enough top heat to keep them at 50 degrees and the mild heat round the pots and the ammonia arising from the manure makes the plants jump, at the same time it is a robust, stout growth.

Geraniums.

I do not put zonal geraniums either into a cold frame or hotbed. There is no place for them equal to an unshaded greenhouse bench. And in a week or so, if they dry out too fast, two inches of plunging material between the pots will help them wonderfully, and for the purpose there is nothing equal to spent hops, either fresh or decayed, but if fresh no visitors can enter the house for a week at least, because a limburger cheese factory would be sweet breezes from the spice islands compared to it. This partial plunging is not extra labor for you have to give them at least one move over and more space about now or they soon crowd and lose their bottom leaves.

Carnations.

A relief to your crowded benches is also found in several things that are better in the open ground by this time. I am not going to touch on carnations for next winter's flowers. You get well told by good authority every week how to manage that important plant. I would merely say that if my ground was dry and in good order, I would not delay a day. But we sell a good many carnations from 3 and 4-inch pots, propagated last October and grown on during winter in a cool house. Our customers ask more and more every year for carnations, and these fill the bill fairly well. If they have three or four shoots they need no stopping and will flower at least from early July till frost kills them. They should be planted at once if you can only get hold of your customers to tell them so.

Pansies.

Now is when pansies should be looking sweetly pretty in the garden and are twice as pretty as they really are, because they have few rivals. I may not think of it at any other time so just now it is well to note for the benefit of those who are beginners, that these August and September sown pansies which are now fine little blooming plants, are just what you want for an early show where the summer bedding plants are to replace them in June. And many are used for vases in the cemeteries. Yet, if you want a bed of pansies to flower all summer (and what is prettier?) the plants sown in February are altogether to be preferred. A heavy, well manured soil, water in abundance in the very hot months and keep the old flowers and seed pods picked off, and your bed of pansies will be as continuously beautiful as a bed of verbenas or petunias, and what meaningless-looking flowers they are compared to the Viola tricolor.

Hardy Plants.

Hollyhocks should be in the ground and growing. The disease struck us so badly two years ago that we got discouraged, but where they can be grown they are stately and lovely plants. The best I ever saw were grown from plants in 4-inch pots, wintered in a cool greenhouse and planted out May 1 in a stiff yellow clay that had a third of cow manure added to it. Our customers ask for them, but delay their orders too late. It is needless to say that the time for transplanting hardy herbaceous plants and grasses will very soon be over, even in our northern climate, and what is to be done in that line must be done at once.

Gladioli.

Don't be too busy to plant your gladioli or at least some of them, and they should, if possible, be within reach of the hose or they suffer a good deal during a dry August.

Primulas.

Early in May is none too soon to sow your first, perhaps only, lot of Primula sinensis. They sell in November and December and round the holidays better than later, for there is not so much opposition. Put a third of leaf-mould in the soil for the seed pans and cover the seeds just out of sight. Keep the soil uniformly moist and shaded till the plants are above ground and then don't let them draw up for want of light. Those who had the good fortune to see the wonderful plants of Primula obconica at Indianapolis know what a grand plant it is when at its best. Have plenty of them of the best strain you can buy. It is a far superior plant to Primula sinensis, not only as a flowering plant but it is valuable for a cut flower.

Show Pelargoniums.

We have not grown the show or fancy pelargoniums for the past two years simply because they did not sell at a profitable price, but the fine collection which Mr. C. W. Ward sent us last spring at the Pan-American (and which lasted nearly two months in flower and was a fine show, but unfortunately seen but by a few) revived a fondness for this handsome plant, of which Mr. Peter Henderson says in his book: "If I could only grow but one flowering plant it would be the show pelargonium." That is rather extravagant praise. I hope many of you are growing them. They do not like dampness. When in flower never let water touch the petals, still what is worse for them would be a cool, wet day or night and no fire heat. You must have fire heat for them for several weeks yet, with ventilation. A cool, moist atmosphere will soon make the petals drop, then the leaves will rot and it is all over for that year. A genial warmth, with ventilation, with plenty of water at the root, and mild fumigation are the conditions.

Poinsettias.

It is now time to start up your poinsettias. If the old stems have been kept perfectly dry at the roots they will be in the right condition. Cut them back to sound wood. If they have been grown in pots, shake out and pot in smaller size. Any light house nowadays is warm enough. Syringe frequently and you will soon see the old stems breaking and you will get cuttings in abundance from June 1 till end of August.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

As we are now within four or five weeks of planting time, it is time to have the procedure of planting thoroughly planned; by having this done beforehand it materially helps in forwarding operations. Young stock should be looked over and its condition noted. The plants which receive a shift at this time will be in about the right condition to plant first week of June. Four weeks of warm weather is about as long as it is good to leave a plant without repotting, and benching plants which have only been shifted a week or ten days is running the risk of giving them a setback, as the roots have not had time to fill the pots, and the recently added soil is apt to break away, taking along with it the newly formed roots. Plants which are not to be benched till late in June or early in July will certainly be better for having two shifts, one now and another three weeks before planting.

Young Beauties, which should now be growing vigorously, should receive every encouragement and should be shifted on just as soon as they require it. If checked in any way at this season it takes them a long time to get over it. This is true of all roses, but applies particularly to Beauties, which seem to take a longer time to recover from a check than do teas and their hybrids.

From now on till planting time the efforts of the grower should be directed to keeping his young stock vigorous, clean and hardy. RIBES.

WINDOW DISPLAY.

CARNATIONS IN THE FIELD.

Please advise through the columns of your valuable paper the best tools to use and the best methods to follow in cultivating a field of 8,000 or 10,000 carnations from time they are taken from house to field in May, until they are ready for the house in September or late August. Would you use wheel hoes, and what make, or depend on the slower process of cultivating by hand hoes?

No. 404.

The main thing required in producing a field of good carnations after having properly manured and prepared the soil is plenty of intelligent cultivating. This should be commenced as soon as planting is finished and kept up throughout the entire growing season. We make a practice of going through our carnation field with the cultivator at least once each week, and if we have a good, heavy shower of rain right after we get through with the regular cultivation, it calls for an extra cultivating as soon as the ground is in working condition again. You will be surprised to find how much longer the soil will retain moisture if it is loosened up soon after a rain than it will if allowed to lie undisturbed and bake in the hot summer sun. Even if it does not rain for a couple of weeks and the ground may seem quite dry, a good cultivating will help the plants wonderfully. Breaking up the crust which naturally forms on the surfact if left undisturbed a week or so, allows the moisture to come up from down below and freshen up the plants.

There is perhaps no way of doing the work more thoroughly than it can be done with the old time hand hoe, but to hoe the field once every week and some weeks twice would mean an immense amount of labor, and unnecessary labor too. While we find it necessary to go through our carnation field with the hand hoes two or three times in a season to get the weeds from between the plants in the row and close up to them on the sides, at the same time it is a fact that by far the largest part of the cultivating is done merely to keep the soil in a loose and mellow condition. One man with the aid of a hand cultivator can tend at least as much ground as five men could with hand hoes. There are many times while we are very busy during the summer months a rain comes up and as soon as the ground can be worked a couple of men are put into the field with the Planet, Jr., and almost before you can think of it they have gone through the patch.

We prefer to use the cultivating teeth which are bolted onto the machine separately, as they can be set close together or far apart to suit the condition of the soil, etc. Be sure and see that you get at least five of these with your implement. The bottom point should point well forward to make the machine run easy, as the sharp point will cut the soil easier than the side of the tooth.

As I said once before, I do not know of any one cultivator that is superior to all others. We use the Planet, Jr., here and it gives excellent service, therefore we have had no occasion for trying any other make. Your hardware dealer may be handling some other good make, but be sure you get the teeth that are bolted on singly, as then you can use two, three or five teeth, according to the width of the rows and the condition of the soil.

One thing I want to warn you against and that is watering the plants in the field with the hose. Unless you give them a thorough soaking so that it goes down through the dry soil it will do more harm than good. If you do water them be sure and cultivate as soon as the ground is fit, just the same as you would after a rain, else the soil will bake quickly much worse than after a rain, because after a rain the atmosphere is charged with moisture and the water does not evaporate from the earth as quickly as it does when there has been no rain for a week and the hot sun pouring down every day. And again, if you once begin to water you must keep it up, else it will merely start the plants into growth, which in turn will suffer more severely than the half-dormant plant. We have found that we have always been able to get the best results from liberal cultivating and dispensing with the hose in the field altogether. After very dry summers, such as we had last year, our plants were not quite so large as when we had plenty of rain, but the plants took hold of the soil quicker after housing and we cut good blooms sooner than when the plants were large and soft. That is what causes me to think unfavorably of irrigating the carnation field.

BLOOMS GETTING SMALLER.

Our carnation blooms are getting smaller as the weather grows warmer. They were given a mulch about two weeks ago. House runs north and south. The west glass is slightly shaded.

J. W. M.

J. W. M. does not give quite enough information to allow of a very definite and conclusive answer. In order to judge as to the real cause of the trouble I should at least know what varieties he is growing. Some varieties naturally begin to get smaller and poorer in every way as soon as hot weather sets in, and in that case it would be a case of summer weather, summer quality. But his letter reads as though all his varieties were doing the same, and there must be more than hot weather at the bottom of the trouble. The soil may have been badly exhausted, and although they were mulched two weeks ago these first blooms would hardly derive much benefit from it, as they were about full grown when it was put on. Then another thing I have often noticed is this: After a mulch has been put on the benches the men, fearing the danger of overwatering, will withhold the water until the soil is as dry as powder, and not being able to see the soil as before on account of the manure, which always remains moist much longer than the soil, they are not aware of the real condition of the soil. The result is the dryer the soil gets the smaller the blooms come, especially during warm weather.

This house running north and south should not need any shading for several weeks, as such houses always get more shade from rafters, etc., than those running east and west. But according to newspaper reports the weather in Kansas has been real midsummer-like and perhaps it would be advisable to put on a little shade. Do not make it as adhesive, however, as you do in midsummer, as you are likely to have a cloudy spell yet, and then you may wish it were off the glass. It should come off with a good shower.

Mix cold water with air-slacked lime, the proper proportion, and use the hand syringe to put it on the house. With a little practice you can make innumerable little spots all over the glass, which will be just enough to break the force of the sun, and I like it better than the strip of whitewash down the center of the glass. It takes about 5 per cent as much time to put it on, too. Give plenty of air right along now day and night, and keep the temperature down as near the winter temperature as possible.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

Carnations Registered.

By Peter Fisher, of Ellis, Mass, "Enchantress," color a beautiful shade of light pink, deepening toward the center, similar too, but far ahead, of Daybreak at its very best. In size and substance as far ahead of that grand old variety as Lawson was at the time of its introduction (in its class). The plant is a splendid grower of vigorous constitution, ideal habit and a very early free and continuous bloomer. Blooms are of fine form, the guard petals being wide and well arranged, the center full and well raised up, the calyx does not burst and the blooms run three and one-half inches to as high as four in diameter. Stem is two to three feet, strong and stiff and supports the immense flower perfectly erect. Easily the greatest advance in its color to date. It is in the same class as Lawson its pollen parent, but ahead of that variety in form, size of bloom, length of stem, productiveness and early blooming. It is of easy cultivation, a splendid propagator, shipper and keeper.

Notice.

Reports of the meeting of the society will be ready for distribution early in May. These will be sent to all paid up members and to any one who may join the society during the coming year. Membership costs $2 per annum and this amount is to be sent the secretary if you wish to join.

CARNATION ENCHANTRESS.

[The following communication reached us a day late for last week's issue.]

I have this day (April 12) sold the entire stock of my new carnation, "Enchantress," to the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. of Joliet, Ill.

I consider the Enchantress by far the best seedling carnation I have raised to date. As compared with the Lawson, it makes a better plant in the field, of ideal habit and a splendid constitution. It blooms earlier than the Lawson, giving a stem much longer, and as stiff as that variety. The blooms average 3½ inches in diameter, of splendid form and great substance. Fully expanded blooms measure 4 inches and over.

The color is far deeper than Daybreak at its best, a beautiful shade of pleasing light pink deepening towards the center. "Magnificent" is the exclamation of many who see it. It is very free, blooming continually, and equal to the Lawson in this respect. It does not burst the calyx during the short, dark days of winter, or at any other season, like the former, as it is of much easier culture and grows best in a temperature of 50 to 52 degrees, producing its enormous blooms on stiff stems (2 to 3 feet in length), which hold the flower perfectly erect.

It is the leading carnation to-day, and as far ahead of and superior to any other variety (including the Lawson) as the Lawson was at the time of its introduction, and decidedly in the same class as the Lawson (its pollen parent). In my opinion it is just the shade of color the trade has been looking for and the buying public admire. It is a splendid keeper and shipper. Seven blooms sent to Buffalo and back (1,000 miles) were kept five days, then re-packed and sent to Indianapolis, 1,000 miles more, kept until the second day of the exhibition. Blooms sent to Chicago Thursday, March 20th, arrived there Saturday, March 22d, kept until April 5th, fourteen days.

It has scored 98 points in competition and been pronounced by expert carnation growers by far the best commercial variety to date. It sells quicker and for higher prices than any other variety.

I have reserved 3,000 plants for my own use and for exhibition purposes, and all interested are invited to call and see them next season. PETER FISHER.

Ellis, Mass., April 12, 1902.

KEEPING CARNATIONS.

I read with interest the article in your valuable paper in regard to keeping carnations in or out of water and I wish to state an experience I had.

In the fore part of the winter the Chicago florists were complaining about the Mrs. Joost carnation going to sleep and being a poor keeper. We considered the carnation all right in other respects, and tried to find a remedy for this. We cut four dozen carnations, put one dozen in water immediately, the second dozen we put in water at the end of 30 minutes, the third dozen one hour after cutting and the fourth dozen were out of water one hour and a half. We placed them all in a cool, dark room and gave them the same general conditions. Of the dozen that we put in water P. D. Q. the first one went to sleep in fourteen days, and the last one in twenty-one days, while the other three dozen were all asleep inside of four days. On examination of the stems we found that those which had been allowed to stand out of water had dried up at the ends and could not take up water, while the ones which were placed in water immediately were as good as the minute they were cut.

Since then we have had no sleepy Joost and it has been proven beyond all doubt and it certainly stands to reason that if cut flowers are placed in water upon being cut you will have no sleepy flowers. This also applies to chrysanthemums. We find that cut flowers treated this way arrive at the wholesale house in better condition and are watched for because the retailers have found that they keep so much better. We keep the flowers in water for at least four hours. W. C. VAN BERGEN.

"THE SCALES OF JUSTICE."

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a design arranged by Thos. M. Fitzgerald, of Beaver, Pa., for the funeral of the late ex-Chief Justice Daniel Agnew, of that city.

The design was four feet in height and was made of carnations, violets, Roman hyacinths, lilies, Beauties, tulips and adiantum.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY OF AMERICA AND ITS FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION.

The action taken by those members of the Chrysanthemum Society of America who met at Indianapolis in February should be indorsed by and receive the hearty support of all who grow the chrysanthemum, for there is much good work awaiting the doing in the chrysanthemum field. The interest in the chrysanthemum is extensive and assuredly will be long sustained. Since the popular regard for the flower has grown to such an extent it will always be in large demand in its season. The record of work performed by the C. S. of A. from its inception to date, though falling short of what might be expected in volume and comprehensiveness, is at least satisfactory in its efficiency, and the benefits arising therefrom have accrued to the growers.

The action above mentioned, of holding an exhibition in chrysanthemum time, should arouse widespread general interest. The Horticultural Society of Chicago has made the exhibition an assured fact, and it now behooves chrysanthemum growers to try and make the show in Chicago next November the greatest and most complete chrysanthemum exhibition ever yet held. A preliminary list of premiums has been issued. It contains 51 classes for chrysanthemum flowers and plants. Copies of the list can be obtained on application to Edwin Lonsdale, Wyndmoor, Pa., or E. A. Kanst, 5700 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, Ill.

This exhibition will certainly bring together a large number who are specially interested in the chrysanthemum, and it would seem eminently fitting to further signalize the occasion by holding a chrysanthemum convention at the same time and place; for, as before said, there is work to be done, and it can best be accomplished when there is a large "community of interests" gathered together.

Reviewing the work that has been accomplished by the Society, we are confronted with the fact that it has been mainly along commercial lines. Coincident with this work we have seen commercial standards of excellence materially advanced. We have also seen the chrysanthemum as an exhibition flower successfully exploited and brought to a surpassing degree of excellence. A continuance of this is most desirable, but a society organized in the interests of a particular flower should take cognizance of all its types and forms. The time will be opportune in Chicago next November. Shall we avail ourselves of it?

A. Herrington.

President Chrysanthemum Society of America.

THE CULTIVATION OF EPACRIS.

Of all hard-wooded winter-flowering plants there are possibly none so useful or graceful as the New Holland shrubs called Epacris. Failure in the culture of these plants I attribute to three causes, viz., 1, lack of air; 2, loose potting; and 3, the too hard cutting-back of plants after flowering. Of the three, the last named is the commonest error. I know but too well that many very successful growers cut their plants hard back after flowering, and they succeed well after this treatment; but I have found them succeed best without this barbarous method.

A German Idea of a Table Decoration in New York.

Epacrises are usually propagated by cuttings of the tops of the shoots, about an inch long; these should be inserted in pots of silver-sand, and put in a forcing-house under a bell glass, or in a hotbed, air being gradually given as soon as the cuttings have rooted. I have, however, found layering to be the best method of multiplication, and whatever others have to say to the contrary, I always manage to root them by this method, whereas scores upon scores of cuttings have failed by damping.

Fill thumb-pots with a compost of peat and sand, care being taken to have a preponderance of sand on the surface for the layers to root into. Place the plant to be propagated on a hard surface in the greenhouse or elsewhere, bend down the lower shoots, cut a notch in them similar to that made in carnation-layering, and peg them down in the pots with a piece of wire or wooden layering-pin, and draw the sand round the layer, giving the plants a gentle watering with a fine rose. Place the plants where they may remain undisturbed until they are rooted, which will probably be in six or seven weeks.

When well rooted, cut the connection between the old plant carefully, and remove the young one on to a shelf near the glass; afford water carefully, and see to its various requirements daily. In about a month after this, shift the plant into a 3½-inch pot, using peat and sand in equal proportions. Crock the pot carefully and well, place some rough peat over the drainage to prevent the finer particles of soil being washed through; be careful and pot firmly, loose potting is a prelude to failure. Press the compost all round the ball of the plant so as to make it quite firm and close. Afterwards remove the plant on to a stage in a cool house, still keeping it near the glass. Apply water carefully, but not fire-heat unless the weather is extremely cold. The following spring, if the plant has rooted well, pinch out the top in order to cause side shoots to form; and in about six weeks after this, when the plant has started to grow once more, shake it out of its pot, and shift into a 5-inch one, employing the same soil as before. In summer, remove the plants to a cold frame, and let them remain there until the end of September, when they should be placed in the cool greenhouse; if they have rooted well, a weak application of liquid manure may be afforded occasionally until they commence to flower.

Treatment of Old Plants.—Never shift the plants into larger pots until they are well rooted; when the plants get large, they will continue in good health for three or four years without shifting, and yet flower well, provided they are occasionally fed with weak liquid manure. Frequent shifting is not requisite, unless young plants are required as specimens. The proper season for a general shifting is any time from March to August, although upon extraordinary occasions, as the breaking of a pot for instance, they may be shifted with safety at any other time. When potting, provide ample drainage, and press or ram the soil firmly. Some growers raise the center of the ball 3 or 4 inches above the sides of the pot, their intention being to prevent the roots from being injured by an excess of water, for if by chance the plant does get an over-supply it can only be round the outside of the pot and at the extremity of the roots; the upper part of the old ball of earth and the stem being so much higher, that the water runs down to the edge of the pot, and the quantity of drainage-material below always keeps the plant from suffering from an over-abundance of water. For my own part, I consider this precaution unnecessary, for provided the plants are healthy, and the application of water is in careful hands, no mischief will accrue from the ordinary potting. After potting, remove the plants to the greenhouse for a time, afterwards place them in a cold frame for the summer; syringe them occasionally, which will serve to keep down thrips.

As soon as the plants have finished flowering, cut back the stronger growths, but leave the weaker shoots at full length. Some cultivators cut all the growths back, but I must confess that, after a trial of the two methods, I find the former practice yields the better result. I do not want to criticise other grower's methods, nor, on the other hand, do I want anyone whose plants do well to follow my rules; but for those who fail to get a maximum quantity of flower, my method of procedure will be found beneficial. Let the plants be syringed daily until the new growths break, afterwards let the treatment be that previously advised.

To recapitulate, the following rules should be carefully followed:—

1. In propagating, employ layering instead of propagation by means of cuttings.

2. Do not shift into larger pots until the plants are pot-bound.

3. Afford an abundance of air, but fire-heat only when the weather is extremely cold.

4. Water with great care.

5. Cut back only the stronger shoots after flowering, but leave the others at full length.

The following is a good selection of varieties:—Autumnalis, red and white; Devoniana, scarlet; Eclipse, crimson and white; Mont Blanc, white-lemon; The Bride, white; Sunset, pink; Vesuvius, crimson and scarlet; alba odorata, white, fragrant; pulchela major, white.—John Denman in Gardeners' Chronicle.

GERMAN FUN.

Each year in its first April issue Moeller's Deutsche Gaertner Zeitung prints many humorous pictures on horticultural subjects, and this year it attempted to poke a little fun at American floral decoration. We reproduce two of the pictures herewith, one showing the artist's dream of a dinner decoration in New York and the other depicting his conception of the bouquets carried by New York ladies. They are certainly amusing and we believe they will appeal to our readers' sense of humor.

END OF THE SUBURBAN FLORIST.

Is it not a fact that the tendency of the times is slowly, but surely, against the existence of the suburban retail florist? Not the country florist—twenty or more miles from a big city, but the one located within ten or fifteen miles of such cities as Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, etc.

Ease and cheapness of transit are of course a factor in the drawing of trade to the large centers. And then the conditions in the city have entirely changed in a decade. Fully one half of the product of greenhouses is now sold by street fakirs. And it is this competition that the suburban man has to meet, not that of the legitimate city stores. Mrs. Thirty Thousand comes in and quotes you prices from Boston, but the prices are street prices, though she will seldom admit it.

In the city of Boston I do not think the number of legitimate stores has increased in ten years. There are, however, twenty street men where there was not one ten years ago. There is food for thought here, for both growers and dealers. Wipe out the stores and how long can the grower afford to run his houses at fakir's prices?

It is a general complaint among the florists in the suburbs of Boston that the best trade—those with money and large grounds—now buy most of their outdoor plants at our local auction room, which caters for retail trade. There the Boston business man, who lives in the suburbs, can step in and buy in quantity to suit, anything from a pansy plant to a rhododendron or shade tree. Where does the suburban florist come in, unless he ships his product to the auction room?

Mr. Editor, this is not a whine. I despise a man who can not stand up and "take his medicine." But it is penned with the idea that it may awaken discussion. Are the conditions which prevail here general in the suburbs of all the large cities? If so, the suburban retail florist (and there is a lot of him) must change with the changing conditions.

Another point I had almost forgotten. The mainstay of the retail florist has always been his funeral work. Now, there are in Boston, at least two large retail firms who employ men to follow up the death announcement, and solicit orders from the bereaved families. Strange to say they meet with more success than would seem possible. Soon I expect they will make up a combination with the doctors and when a death occurs we will see waiting on the door steps representatives of these enterprising firms, ready to battle for the privilege of furnishing the tributes of love and respect. RAILROAD FARES TO ASHEVILLE.

The railroads represented in the Southeastern Passenger Association have agreed to a special rate of one fare for the round trip to Asheville and return from all points in their territory for the S. A. F. convention next August. This covers all the territory east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio river, to Cincinnati and a line drawn therefrom through White Sulphur Springs and Washington.

This is the lowest rate of transportation ever conceded to the society and should insure a very large attendance from that section of the country. The railroads participating in this agreement are the following:

Alabama Great Southern Railroad.
Alabama & Vicksburg Railway.
Atlantic Coast Line Railroad.
Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway.
Atlantic, Valdosta & Western Railway.
Atlantic & Birmingham Railroad.
Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.
Central of Georgia Railway
Charleston & Western Carolina Railway.
Cincinnati & New Orleans and Texas Pacific Railway.
Florida East Coast Railway.
Frisco System (K. C., M. & B. R. R.)
Georgia Railroad.
Georgia Southern & Florida Railway.
Illinois Central Railroad.
Jacksonville & Southwestern Railroad.
Louisville & Nashville Railroad.
Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad.
Macon & Birmingham Railway.
Mobile & Ohio Railroad.
Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway.
New Orleans & Northeastern Railroad.
Norfolk & Western Railway.
Plant System of Railways.
Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad.
Southern Railway.
The West Point Route (A. & W. P. R. R. & W. Ry. of Ala.)
Tifton & Northeastern Railroad.
Tifton, Thomasville and Gulf Railway.
Washington Southern Railway.
Western & Atlantic Railroad.
Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad.
Yazoo & Mississippi Valley Railroad.

For the Trunk Line, New England, Central and Western Committees' territories rates have not yet been fixed, but for such part of the journey as comes within Southeastern control passengers from other jurisdictions are assured of a fare based upon the rate above given and as soon as anything more definite has been agreed upon, prompt announcement of same will be made.

BOILERS.

I have an opportunity to buy a 30-horse power tubular boiler in good condition for a very low price. Which would be cheaper—to buy it or a cast-iron boiler?

Which would be the most expensive to run? I have two houses, each 20x80, and shall build more as soon as I can make it convenient. I want to use the boiler with a hot water system. I think I could buy it and put in cellar complete for $175. J. G. W.

In reply to the inquiry of J. G. W., the question depends very largely on whether he will extend his glass area within a reasonable time or not. A 30-horse power boiler would have a capacity of about three times the work he proposes, at present, to put on it, and if he has reasonable prospects of extending his glass area, it would be policy, provided the boiler is in good condition, to purchase it for the price he mentions; otherwise, it would be better to purchase a cast-iron boiler of the desired capacity. Until such time as extensions are made, it would be necessary to stop off a part of the grate surface, in order to avoid unnecessary consumption of fuel, but, even with this, he would burn a little more fuel than with a boiler especially proportioned for the work in hand.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

H. M. K. asks whether "Tomato Sutton's Best of All, Grand Rapids lettuce and Telephone cucumbers are good for outdoor culture."

The tomato named will be found excellent for outdoor culture, best results being obtained probably when the plants are trained up stakes and kept to one or two shoots only. I would not plant Grand Rapids as an outdoor lettuce while there are so many fine heading varieties of the Boston Market type, though I have no doubt that a crop could be secured from the first named in the early summer.

I have seen the English varieties of cucumber grown outside but not with the success of our hardier American types. Your correspondent would probably be more successful if he patched up a rough frame and put out his cucumbers therein. They could then be covered with glass when stress of weather necessitated. C. H. NEW YORK.

The old Thirty-fourth street market takes a new lease of life May 1 under the management of A. Herrmann, the florists' supply man, whose success in his own line augurs well for this new departure. Several of the old guard remain. The "lines" are to be generously "drawn" and it is more than likely the venture of Mr. Herrmann's will be liberally appreciated. A few weeks will show which way the wind blows, and if as a flower market "the glory has departed" Mr. Herrmann could add the whole space to his own particular business and be much the better for the increased convenience.

The space in the Coogan building to which the "Cut Flower Exchange" moves is ample, and without a doubt will all be taken. It is within the possibilities that the whole of this fine building may ultimately be utilized by the florists, and that club rooms, bowling alleys, banquet hall, and library and reading rooms may all center under the one roof.

Hardly necessary to designate prices of cut flowers this week. The average is about the same as that of all the large cities. Liberty specials are in constant demand and bring easily $20 per 100; even Beauty cannot command better appreciation. Its popularity is on the increase. The country is only awakening to its value.

The hot spell vanished as quickly as it came. The weather for a week past has been ideal.

Cheas & Boddington are moving May 1 to a large store on Greenwich street, where their growing business will find ample accommodation.

C. H. Joosten, too, has the moving fever, and this time locates at 178 Chambers street, a much better center than the Dey street store he has vacated.

The violet king, Geo. Saltford, also moves on May 1 to 46 West Twenty-ninth street, near his old stand, and adds to his specialty a general cut flower business.

To be in line with the general improvements W. H. Gunther, the wholesaler, is putting in a new front and otherwise renovating and improving his store.

The "oldest florist in town," J. B. Nugent, who is in his eighty-first year, opens a new store on Park avenue near Seventy-third street, an excellent location, on the first of May.

Suzuki & Iida's genial representative, Mr. Leehner, is enjoying his annual trip to Europe.

Julius Roehrs has lost his orchid grower, Mr. Faust, who died a week ago. He will be greatly missed by his employer and friends, with whom he was popular.

Foley's retail store on the Bowery was damaged by fire last Thursday about $2,500 worth.

The New York Florists' Club's outing promises well; a good many tickets are already sold. It will be a first-class affair in every way and will appeal to the best in the trade.

May 2nd is Arbor Day here; special prizes are offered to the school children and the schools for best kept grounds. The state tree is the maple. The Tree Planting Association is doing good work in encouraging this laudable effort to beautify public and private grounds.

The special meeting of the Florists' Club called for Monday evening was fairly well attended and the decision to leave the selection of the new hall in the hands of the club's officers was unanimously approved. The members after adjournment gathered in harmonious groups and indulged in happy and regretful reminiscenses until a late hour, and the old hall was not vacated without many expressions of sorrow. The decision as to where the club will next meet is awaited anxiously.

Fronds of the new fern Nephropelis Fosteriauna from Boston, were exhibited by Mr. Shaw for the first time in New York, and they elicited universal approval.

Many of the club members gave the balance of the evening to bowling. And preparations for Asheville go on steadily. Captain Lang's challenge still holds, notwithstanding that bluff of Bro Beneke's.

Julius Roehrs had a little argument with a trolley car last week. The car is still running and Mr. Roehrs will be after a reasonable time for rest.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The supply of cut flowers is outstripping the demand, causing better stock to go on the street, and sometimes considerable waste. Prices have fallen, the best Beauties rarely bringing more than $3 per dozen, and sometimes less; $6 per 100 buys good Brides and Maids, and $2 per 100 is about the price for good carnations, though sales at higher figures are occasionally recorded. The chief shipping demand from the south is for school commencements, quantities of very fine stock being used. Some buyers are ordering more heavily for this purpose than they did at Christmas. The month has closed locally with a number of handsome wedding decorations which consumed much choice stock, Beauties, valley, orchids and lilacs having the call.

Leo Niessen is receiving pale pink and lavender sweet peas which sell at $1.50 per 100.

Edward Reid is handling some very fine carnations. His shipping business has been steadily increasing.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving pink lilacs from the south.

Charles E. Meehan had some late Easter lilies that were in demand at $8 to $10 per 100.

Carl Jurgens of Newport, R. I., is sending fine single daffodils (I think the variety is Ajax) to Leo Niessen; they bring $2 per 100.

Violets are about over; pansies and forget-me-nots are plentiful; arbutus is at its best.

Plants.

The stores are gay with fancy geraniums and other small blooming plants, used for window boxes, vases and beds. Considerable work of this kind is now being done. Many of the hotels have followed their Easter plant displays with pansies or geraniums edged with trailing vines. The suburban florists are very busy preparing their bedding stock for planting out in a week or so. The seed stores are distributing small plants of carnations, roses, moon vines, vegetables, etc.

Notes.

Stephen Mortensen, Southampton, Pa., is preparing to build two more houses, each 100 feet long, with the Garland gutter between. This rising grower, who was foreman for Edwin Lonsdale five years ago, will now have over 20,000 feet of glass devoted to roses grown for cut flowers. His Liberties and Bridesmaids have won him fame. He has also a good shipping trade in young roses, which he does exceptionally well.

Simon Bros., of Wilmington, are sending in some nice spikes of gladiolus to Leo Niessen.

The H. A. Dreer Co. will erect another range of glass at Riverton this summer.

Wm. Thompson, whose store on Thirteenth street was pulled down to give place to a large building, is now nicely located on a farm at Clifton, Pa. He proposes opening a new store in this city in the fall.

H. M. Paschall, of Holyoke, near Wilmington, finds his mushrooms under the benches fully as profitable as his carnations on the benches.

Wm. Burger, of Germantown, is contemplating erecting a new mushroom house.

JOHN H. SIEVERS.

We have pleasure in presenting herewith an excellent portrait of Mr. John H. Sievers, the well-known florist of San Francisco, Cal., who has been making an extensive tour of the east lately, and regarding whose new carnations an article appeared in our last issue.

Mr. Sievers is not only unusually well informed, but is an exceedingly pleasant gentleman to meet, as those whom he has recently visited will testify. It appears that his becoming a florist was somewhat accidental. In his early business career he was in the banking line, and being himself very fond of flowers and plants was brought into association with florists. He made some loans to one of them which were not repaid, and he finally found himself with an establishment on his hands. He decided to conduct the business himself, putting in more capital, and has made a decided success of it. He is now one of the veterans in the trade and says he has found no cause to regret the venture made many years ago.

As showing how trifles are apt to change one's whole career it is interesting to know that Mr. Sievers when a young man visited the Philippine Islands with the expectation of taking a place in a German bank. Through an unexpected change in the plans of some member of the firm this fell through and he returned to San Francisco. But for this little accident Mr. Sievers would now have been a banker in the Philippines instead of raising startling new carnations in California.

Mr. Sievers was surprised as well as much gratified by the cordial welcome given him everywhere by members of the trade he visited on his eastern trip. He talks now of re-visiting Europe, which he has not seen since 1857. Then it took him 180 days to go from Bremen to San Francisco. Now he can make the trip in twelve days.

BOSTON.

Week Ending April 26.

Of course the situation was bad enough during the week of April 20-26, but was it not really as good as could well be expected? Shipments of all kinds except violets and double jonquils have been fairly heavy and fairly well taken care of. Prices have drooped a bit on nearly everything, but have receipts to the grower diminished as fast as running expenses of his establishment? An unusual amount of coal has been used this winter. I presume most florists' bunkers are empty and high hopes are entertained of small needs in that line from now to the end of the season.

I know of nothing special to be remarked concerning any one crop now coming in. Violets are not plentiful, but their place has been largely taken by the mayflower, which has been good and plentiful and still continues. I have seen no good double jonquils lately, but plenty of fine single ones, and a fair supply of other bulb material makes the scarcity almost unnoticeable.

The recently reported sale of the Enchantress by Mr. Peter Fisher, to the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. of Joliet, for $10,000, is the only movement of any note in the carnation department.

The deal for a new location for the co-operative market hangs fire yet, but will probably go through all right.

I. E. Coburn & Son, Everett, have a particularly fine display of pansy plants this season. No description can do them justice.

J. Austin Shaw, envoy extraordinary to the REVIEW, has lately enlivened us with a call. He always enters more gracefully than is possible for others of his avoirdupois. J. S. MANTER.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of roses and carnations has shortened some, and prices are somewhat firmer on roses. First-class teas now bring $6 readily, and lower grades in proportion. Carnation prices remain the same as last week—$1 to $2 for good stock and $3 for fancy, but the cut is rather better cleaned up. Lots of lilac is now arriving and good stock moves very well. Outdoor tulips also find buyers at moderate prices, but the poets narcissus doesn't seem to be wanted at any price. There is a great accumulation of these in the market. Calla lilies also hang. Shipping demand continues very good, but local call is light.

Various Items.

Last Friday a heavy hail storm did serious damage south of the city. Among the greenhouse establishments suffering being those of Heim Bros. and the Hilmers at Blue Island. Heim Bros. estimate that it will take $2,500 worth of glass to replace the broken lights in their houses, and at Hilmer's the loss was also heavy.

Glass seems to be still rising in price. The best quotation a large buyer could get last week on 16x24 A glass was $4.55 per box.

Paul Kopanka, who has for several years been in charge of a rose section at Peter Reinberg's, has gone to Pleasant Hill, Mo., where he has taken the position of foreman for George M. Kellogg.

L. C. Chapin, of Lincoln, Neb., was a welcome visitor last week. We understand, though, that he could not find time to show the bowlers that hundred degree arm-swing of his.

George Harrer is sending to E. H. Hunt blooms of a pink sport of American Beauty that is certainly a very promising novelty. The color is a very pleasing shade of pink and the petals have much substance.

Charley Hughes has graduated from Deamud's and has returned to his home in Hinsdale, Mich., where he will take a post-graduate course in greenhouse work.

Thomas Rogers has removed to Whitehall, Mich., where he has leased the C. W. Redfern plant.

Mr. L. Coatsworth has been in New Castle for several weeks superintending the building of the new range of glass at the establishment of Benthey & Co. He reports a heavy windstorm last week that did some slight damage to partly completed structures and that at one time threatened to be serious.

At the parks the tulips are nearing their best and the herbaceous perennials are showing their early spring foliage tints. The trees are not yet in full leaf. The weather continues cool.

Arbutus is now arriving in quantity and that which reaches the market in good condition sells very well.

Bowling.

In the games against the Pastimes on Friday, April 25, the Florists lost two out of three. The scores were as follows:

ST. LOUIS.

Trade the past week was up and down, but averaged fair for this time of the year. The weather was unpleasant nearly all week and a little fire made things quite comfortable, and frost was expected. Most of the retailers say that funeral work was about all the business they had last week and that there was hardly any counter trade, even at the cheap prices that prevailed down town where they had carnations marked down to 10 cents and three dozen for 25 cents, and roses at 25 cents per dozen. Most of the store men west of Twelfth street are keeping up the price on carnations at 50 cents, and on roses at $1 per dozen, and they seem to sell about as many at these prices as do the cheap stores down town.

At the wholesale market things are quite lively some days, with plenty of stock for any amount of business. Roses are getting smaller, though some very good stock is still coming in. The best are selling at from $4 to $5; seconds (these are most plentiful), from $1 to $3, and even cheaper in 1,000 lots. Beauties, from $4 to $12 per 100, with plenty of short-stemmed ones on the market.

Carnations overstocked the market all last week at very low prices. Some very fair stock was sold as low as $6.50 per 1,000; fancy stock at from $2 to $2.50 per 100; the bulk of the good carnations went at $1.50 per 100. Some fine Prosperity from J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. were seen the past week which sold well; other stock from this company has a good call.

Bulb stock is the same as ever—market full, with very little sale and plenty of it is dumped. Almost any price will buy it, so we will not quote prices.

Sweet peas are selling well, that is, the fine long stemmed ones, which bring as high as $1 per 100; others range from that down to as low as 25 cents per 100.

Harrisiis and callas are quite plentiful and can be bought as low as $5 and $6 per 100. Southern lilac is coming up fine now, and brought $5 per 100 sprays last week.

The greenhouse men are now loaded down with business and are kept constantly on the go, delivering large plant orders. The general stock seen is about the same as in former years. Most of the growers claim that trade in this line has been much better so far than in former years, and the season has only begun.

Mr. W. W. Coons, representing the Trade Press Bureau of Chicago, called on the trade last week.

Mr. Hunter Hough, of Paducah, Ky., formerly a florist of that place, recently called on friends in the trade here.

Mr. J. G. Mead, representing the Corticelli Silk Co., was here selling ribbons to the trade last week.

A. S. Halstedt and E. W. Guy, of Belleville, Ill., were also callers last week buying supplies.

F. W. Taylor, Chief of Horticulture for the World's Fair, has moved his office to rooms 219 and 221 in the Administration Building on the World's Fair grounds.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held Thursday afternoon, May 8, at 3 o'clock. Some very important business is to be transacted and the president hopes for a large attendance. The question of how to bring the members to the meetings will again be brought up. Two essays will also be read which will make the meeting of interest to everybody.

Arnold Ringier, representing the supply house of W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, came in this Tuesday morning from the coast, looking the picture of health. His western trip was a most successful one.

The Bowling Club rolled three games Monday night. Miller was high man, followed by Ellison and Kunz. Next Monday night ends the first month's prize contest.

The scores were as follows:

	H	1	2	3	Total.	Ave.
Theo. Miller	35	206	170	213	589	196
A. Y. Ellison	0	180	217	185	582	193

CINCINNATI.

Market Conditions.

Business during the past week was something like the weather—good one day, bad the next. All in all, though, it was not so bad, and most of the stock was moved at fair prices despite the large quantities coming in.

Carnations of the poorer grades were in over-supply and were slow sale; fancy and medium grades sold well and were cleaned up each day.

The supply of roses has decreased considerably, and the quality is none too good. While the color holds up nicely, size is not up to the standard and many shipments are rather soft and show the effects of the hot sun.

Bulbous stock, with the exception of valley, is gradually decreasing in supply. There is some good valley still to be had and it sells well.

Virginian violets are still coming in, and they are good. During the past week they sold well, because the local growers are all cut out.

Sweet peas are coming in in increased quantities and sell well. Some very good long-stemmed ones can be found in white, and pink and white.

Lots of outdoor narcissus and hyacinths are to be seen at the produce markets and they sell for almost nothing; but their season is short-lived, and it is a good thing that it is so.

During the past week we experienced the highest winds ever known in this part of the country; at one time the wind reached the velocity of 55 miles per hour. The florists, somehow, were favored by fate and besides a few panes of glass broken, I have heard of no damage being done.

Prices on stock are as follows: Roses—Bridesmaids, Meteors, etc., good stock, 4 to 5 cents; medium, 2 to 4 cents; Liberty, 6 cents for best stock, 2 to 4 cents for seconds; Beauties are scarce in this market. Carnations—Fancy, 4 cents; medium, 2 to 3 cents; ordinary, 50 cents to $1.50. Bulbous stock—Valley, 3 to 4 cents; tulips, white, 3 cents; V. Sion, 3 cents; narcissus, paper white, 2 to 3 cents; Harrisii, 10 to 15 cents; callas, 6 to 8 cents. Violets, 25 to 50 cents per 100. Sweet peas, 50 to 75 cents. Smilax, 15 cents per string. Asparagus, 50 to 60 cents per string. Eastern ferns, $2 per 1,000. Galax leaves, green and bronze, $1 per 100. Leucothoe sprays, 50 cents per 100.

A DAY AT THE HUB.

Floricultural Boston is a big place to see in a day. But one can, in that time, at least "touch the hem of its garment." At the flower market the rush was over when I called and your representative, Mr. Manter, told me it had been a good day and there "was nothing left." Prices seem to hold as steadily as in New York and retailers were having a busy day.

Welch Bros. and Sutherland, the wholesalers, looked very hopeful and happy, and report an excellent demand. Mr. Sutherland's new store is very convenient and his branch next door is crowded with a general line of florists' supplies.

The cut-flower market is growing ambitious and is looking for room with a prospect of a most desirable place in a convenient location with over three times the floor accommodation of the present quarters.

The new Horticultural Building is a disappointment, but I was prepared for my own adverse criticism, for I have never heard any one say a good word for it. Outwardly, there is a semblance of architectural beauty, but within it looks like a huge vault, dingy, dreary, uninviting. The Philadelphia Hall is a "palace" in comparison.

The parks in Boston are already beautiful, vegetation is ahead of New York, the great tulip-beds are a mass of brilliant coloring.

Galvin's two stores were like beehives, crowded. His Back Bay place has doubled in size since I saw it a year ago. Nothing just like it anywhere, roomy, convenient, handsome. All the other retailers had brilliant spring windows. Some of them unique. McMulkin's was a "dream" in mignonette, the immense front completely devoted to the finest grade of this fragrant spring reminder. This new firm has an immense store on Boylston street near the park running completely through the block. Mr. McMulkin reports a great nursery business and a much larger cut-flower trade than he anticipated for his initial year.

I saw Bro. Elliott, the asparagus king, in the flower market, looking young and free from care and ready for the angelic investigations at Asheville.

I went over to Dorchester and saw that new nephrolepis, "Anna Foster." It's a beauty. I found it fully up to and beyond the newspaper description. Mr. Foster will have 100,000 of them ready for September distribution. Its habits are good and so is its parentage. I predict a great future and widespread popularity for Nephropelis Fosterianna.

SELAGINELLA FOR DECORATING.—The method employed by those who use the dwarf selaginella (S. Kraussiana) largely as carpeting under larger plants used for decorating and in shallow receptacles in conjunction with cut flowers, forced bulbs, etc., is quite a simple one. Only the growing tips are used for propagation, and these are dibbled in moderately close together in shallow boxes or pans. Here, in a warm house, they root quickly, and make a beautiful surfacing of greenery that can be lifted out and used for many purposes without giving much evidence of recent removal. It is when the selaginella has to be torn asunder because the growths have become interlaced that it for some time assumes a draggled appearance. Frequent propagation from tips, and a shallow rooting medium are the essential points to be observed.

SLIME WEEDS ON PONDS.—In reply to several queries respecting the best method of keeping ponds and lakes clear of slime weed, a correspondent sends the following: "It may interest your readers to know that for years we had a hard battle with slime weed in our large pond, and though we frequently raked the weed out it increased with great rapidity, and the water never seemed clean. The difficulty has, however, been overcome in a simple way. We secured a pair of swans, and these birds not only add to the beauty of the artificial water, but they keep the water clean."

BEGONIA LAFAYETTE.—This brilliant crimson-scarlet, double-flowered begonia forms the dominant feature of a large oval bed at Hampton Court, and presents the most attractive floral bed out of the one hundred and thirty-four in those famous gardens. It is safe to say that there are few more beautiful beds in the kingdom than is this one. It is the great merit of this begonia that, whilst the flowers are densely double, they are not large, and are held very erect. It is, for bedding, the best tuberous begonia ever sent out. The plants are thinly disposed on a carpet of Leucophyton Browni. From out of their midst stand up here and there golden-plumed celosias and a few silver variegated fuchsias and abutilons, with, for dress plants, Eulalia zebrina, the whole being edged with the prostrate Abutilon vexillarium variegatum. The begonia will doubtless be in universal request next year.

BEGONIA PRESIDENT CARNOT.—Within the last few years increased attention has been directed towards the shrubby forms of begonia, and deservedly so, for the ornamental qualities of some of them are of a high order. A particularly showy hybrid is President Carnot, which pushes up stout shoots clothed with light green leaves, tinged more or less with red. It will reach a height of three to four feet, and in this way the massive drooping clusters of blossoms are seen to great advantage. Some of the clusters are nearly a foot in diameter, and contain a great number of bright rosy carmine tinted flowers. The male and female blossoms are borne in separate bunches, the last-named being by far the more showy and lasting in character. When growing freely, this variety flowers almost throughout the year. It bears a considerable resemblance to the old Begonia coccinea, often known in gardens as B. corallina, which was one of its parents, the other being the Brazilian Begonia olbia. This hybrid was raised by M. Crozy, then of Lyons, and distributed about ten years ago. By reason of its striking appearance and freedom of flowering it soon became popular, and is now met with in most collections. Begonia coccinea or corallina, above alluded to as one of its parents, is a very showy species, under certain conditions. Given liberal treatment and a light, airy structure, it will push up sturdy shoots to a height of six feet or more, and produce in abundance its clusters of bright coral-red blossoms.

LAGERSTROEMIA INDICA. — During growth copious supplies of water will be necessary, and increased heat. Red spider often attacks the plants, therefore heavy syringings should be frequently given as a deterrent until flowering commences. A compost consisting of equal parts peat and loam, with a small portion of dried cow manure, broken finely, and a liberal addition of silver sand will suit the plants admirably. Ample drainage should always be given to allow the water to pass away from the soil freely. As soon as it is seen that the new roots are active, with a corresponding growth at the top, then is the time to apply weak liquid manure once or twice a week. When the plants pass out of flower water should be gradually withheld, and in winter but very little will suffice. Cuttings of the half-ripened wood will be found to strike readily in sand, if the pots are plunged in the propagating bed. To insure an abundance of flowers the lagerstroemias must not be over-potted.

EUCHARIS.—The bulb mite has played such sad havoc among eucharis during recent years that one rarely meets with the robust, healthy plants so common a few years since. Nevertheless strenuous efforts should be made to cope with it, as few stove plants are more charming or useful when at their best. It is not at all necessary to repot the plants annually, providing they are in a satisfactory condition. I am perfectly certain that much of the trouble is caused by imperfect drainage and overwatering. Though undoubtedly a moisture-loving plant, the eucharis will not succeed for any length of time when in sour soil, consequently every care should be taken to insure good drainage. The crocks should be thoroughly clean, carefully arranged, and covered with some good tough fiber so that the fine soil cannot pass through it. A suitable compost is two parts light fibrous loam and two parts peat, both of which should be broken by hand, and one part leaf-soil, with a liberal amount of finely-broken potsherds, charcoal, and coarse silver sand, all of which should be mixed and warmed before use. The compost should be made moderately firm about the bulbs. After potting, place the plants in a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees, but do not plunge the pots. Great care should be exercised not to overwater. Syringe the foliage two or three times during the day, always using tepid water for this purpose and for watering.

EPIPHYLLUMS.—These highly attractive winter-flowering plants are well worthy of extended cultivation, and though they flourish fairly well on their own roots and are easily raised from cuttings, they are much more effective when worked on the pereskia. The stock should be from nine inches to a foot in height, and split down the center about one inch; into the split insert a short piece of young epiphyllum growth, which should be prepared wedge-shaped to make it fit as neatly as possible, and pin the whole firmly with one of the thorns taken from the pereskia. Finally, bind a little soft moss round, fix with bast, place in a shady part of the stove, and keep damp, when in a short time the two will unite and the scion commence to grow. Epiphyllums are generally most serviceable in five-inch or six-inch pots in a compost of peat, loam, and lime rubble. They should be placed in the stove to make their growth, and again introduced to heat when required to flower, but very little water should be given till after they have finished blooming.

BEGONIA TURNFORD HALL.—This is unquestionably one of the greatest floricultural gains of the season, and it is not surprising that it should have created much interest among the visitors to the Drill Hall, or that every member of the R. H. S. Floral Committee should have voted in favor of its receiving distinction. It has much the same habit as the best type of Gloire de Lorraine; the flowers are, if anything, a size larger and white, tinged with rose pink. The plants placed on the committee table were simply cones of flowers, and afforded the best possible proof of the value of the variety for decorative purposes.

DEUTZIA GRACILIS.—To obtain the best results with this beautiful shrubby plant, they should be pruned immediately after they have done flowering annually, and after they have well broken away repotted in an open rich compost, and encouraged to make the best possible growth in an intermediate temperature. They should afterwards be removed to a cold frame to complete their growth, and then removed to the open to thoroughly ripen. The long young shoots, if well done, will flower from tip to base, and are much more beautiful and useful than when the flowers are borne on stunted branches.

THE SOIL is a laboratory or workshop in which a number of most wonderful chemical actions are taking place, whereby plant-food is always being prepared little by little for reception and assimilation by the growing plant. In this way the agencies of Nature assist the gardener in converting insoluble organic matter and mineral substances into an assimilable form for plants; should there be no growing plants ready to take up the nitric acid as it is formed it is lost, for it has been well said that the element nitrogen is always trying either to run away in the drainage or to fly away as ammonia-gas into the atmosphere. The mineral substances, except lime, are held in suspension by the soil until needed.

means a common species, yet at the same time it is fairly well known. It belongs to the group furnished with dark green needle-like leaves, or rather phyllodes, that play the part of the true leaves. These phyllodes are about an inch in length, and arranged for the greater part in whorls, hence the specific name of verticillata. The flowers are of a light yellow tint, and disposed in cylindrical clusters, which are borne in great profusion. It is not one of the species that can be recommended for flowering in small pots, such as A. Drummondi, but as large specimens in pots or tubs, or, better still, planted out in the greenhouse or conservatory, it is one of the most desirable. It may also be used as a pillar in a lofty structure. The densely-arranged dark green spiny phyllodes give it an ornamental appearance at all seasons.

BUYING PLANTS.

W. S. B., a communication from whom appeared under above heading in our issue of April 10th, sends us a letter he had received from a fellow-sufferer, and which had been addressed to him in our care. This party also ordered coleus several weeks before and had up to the time of writing his letter received neither the plants nor his money back. He mentions the name of the advertiser, but as the advertisement did not appear in the REVIEW we do not feel called upon to publish his letter.

W. S. B. asks that further communications drawn out by his notes in our issue of April 10th be addressed direct to us. We repeat that we will not carry the advertisements of unreliable people at any price, and if any such accidentally creep into our columns we shall appreciate the aid of our readers in locating them. But we cannot attempt to adjust differences of readers with advertisers in other papers. If H. F. C. cannot get an answer to his complaint to the publishers of the paper in which the advertisement appeared his recourse is to answer no further advertisements in that paper. No complaint addressed to the REVIEW has failed to receive prompt attention, and should any further ones be received they will likewise be promptly attended to.

Asheville, N. C.

We have received from Mr. W. J. Godfrey, Exmouth, England, a large colored plate showing four of his chrysanthemums life size. All are of the Jap. incurved type and on the plate they range from eight to nine inches in diameter. The colors are red, crimson, yellow and pink. The blooms make a very striking picture.

Birmingham, Ala.—C. H. Reed has bought a large block of stock in the Amzi Godden Seed Co. and has merged his florist business with it. The concern is now known as the Amzi Godden Co., seed merchants and florists, and Mr. Reed is vice president and treasurer.

Providence, R. I.—It is reported in the daily press that Timothy O'Connor, the florist, may soon wed Mrs. W. B. Bannigan, a very wealthy widow, whose fortune is given as $2,000,000.

Milwaukee, Wis.—An item in one of the daily papers indicates that C. C. Pollworth has been mentioned as a possible successor of one of the park commissioners whose term expires soon.

Benton Harbor, Mich.—R. A. Smythe is preparing to start in the business here, expecting to make a specialty of carnations. His present plan is to build a house 30x200 this summer as a starter.

New Castle, Ind.—It is reported that the McGrath heirs have been offered $10,000 for their nine-acre tract of land by Chicago men who wish to build a range of greenhouses upon it.

Auburn, N. Y.—David C. Howell, for some years head gardener at the state prison, from which position he resigned about a year ago, died April 20, at the advanced age of 81 years.

Mr. Walter Mott, of the Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co., Jamestown, N. Y., is making a tour of the east in the interests of his firm and is meeting with great success.

Fort Scott, Kan.—Mr. J. K. Postma, formerly of Paducah, Ky., has leased the greenhouses of Mrs. Alma S. Patterson and will conduct the business from April 15th on.

Goshen, Ind.—A. J. Santschl & Sons are preparing to engage in business as florists. They are building a greenhouse, 50x15.

PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. M. Rice, of the firm of M. Rice & Co., florists' supply house, left Saturday last for Europe to be gone for two months. He will scour the continent for novelties and will also have some of his own creations made there. The trade can look forward to seeing some "up-to-date" novelties next season from this growing house. While Mr. Rice is abroad Mr. B. Escher will be "at home" to look after any and all of his numerous friends who may stop off in Philadelphia.

Robert Crawford, Jr., one of the pioneer florists of Philadelphia, celebrated on Friday evening last his twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. This was a complete surprise to his numerous friends, as Robert does not look or feel his age. He was the recipient of many handsome presents. May he live to celebrate his golden wedding anniversary surrounded by all his family. R.

PIPING.

How many 1-inch pipe will it take to heat a small house, 36x10 and 6½ feet high at the ridge, same to be heated to 50 degrees in zero weather? Heating to be by steam. B. A. J.

In reply to the inquiry of B. A. J., to maintain a night temperature of 50 degrees in the house he describes, he should have five lines of 1-inch pipe, but preferably six lines, three under each of the two benches. Henry W. Gibbons.
New York.

BALTIMORE.

Correction.

In last week's Baltimore letter the sum received from the United States by the state institution referred to should have been $40,000 and not $540,000, as the types made it.

The Reading Nursery, Reading, Mass., sends us a set of four neatly printed and finely illustrated booklets, with the titles "Trees," "Hardy Shrubs," "Vines," and "Hardy Evergreens." They contain a great deal of useful information and must have considerable value in calling attention in a dignified way to the specialties of the Reading Nursery, though no prices are given.

Crookston, Minn.—Messrs. Larsen & Carpenter, dealers in agricultural implements, express the belief that there is a splendid opening here for some one to start a greenhouse and raise flowers and early vegetables.

Norwalk, O.—Floyd Anderson reports business as especially good the past month. Three wedding orders in one week helped considerably to swell receipts. Says he would not think of doing without the Review.

Mason City, Ia.—The Wheeler Floral Co. are extending their range of glass by adding one house 25x42 and two houses 20x42 each.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Business has been running smoothly and a healthy condition of affairs is reported from all sources. Plenty of good stock is to be had at reasonable figures, which enables the retailers to keep up attractive window displays. Violets are through blooming, but were a fine crop until a week ago. The Easter lily still lingers with us, and a good supply is promised up to Decoration Day.

For the inauguration of the new city officials on the 21st at the City Hall there was the customary display of bouquets, emblems, etc., and the Council chambers were decorated with palms and American Beauty roses. Among the floral tokens were noticed a rooster, a horseshoe and several large baskets, all handsomely arranged. Arthur Newell got the whole order, which was carte blanche, and since then we learn that a trip to England in time for King Edward's coronation is contemplated.

A fearful windstorm, almost reaching cyclonic proportions, visited us last week and played havoc with early vegetation. We had hoped to see a good heavy rain, but it passed over into Kansas, leaving us as dry now as it was last fall. The season is backward and we need fully six inches of water before the ground can be worked for the summer planting. Outdoor tulips in the parks and on the paseo are a failure, same as last spring, and a disappointment to everybody.

The nurserymen report an increase in the sales of their stock in the city in spite of the unfavorable season, but a decided falling off in sales in the rural districts. H. J. M.

CLIMBING CLOTHILDE SOUPERT

In the Review of April 17th we notice that the Dingee & Conard Co., Westgrove, Pa., have the following to say about Climbing Clothilde Soupert rose: "This rose originated with the P. J. Berckmans Company, Augusta, Ga., who offered it for several years, and we secured stock from them. We offered it in our catalogue for 1901, giving it a color plate, thus attracting attention to its good qualities. We believe that we were the first catalogue house to offer this variety, etc."

As to the claim of the D. & C. Co. being the first to catalogue this rose, would state that this rose originated in our grounds, at Augusta, Ga., in 1896 (original is still growing vigorously). We catalogued the above-mentioned rose for the first time in 1899. We sold plants to the D. & C. Co. in January, 1900. Therefore, you will see that this rose was advertised by us two years before being advertised by the D. & C. Co.

P. J. Berckmans Co.

We have received from Alexander McConnell, New York, a copy of his catalogue containing "A limited descriptive list of selected hardy evergreens, deciduous trees and shrubs, herbaceous and perennial plants, adapted for improvement and beautifying of the surroundings of country homes and estates." It is very neatly printed and handsomely illustrated and is an excellent model for those issuing catalogues of this sort.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Hardy Vines.

There is a marked improvement in the taste for ornamental gardening among our people all along the line, and climbers and vines, as they are often called now, enter largely into our customers' wants. They want them for verandas, fences, and perhaps for a screen to hide some neighbor's kitchen windows. It's perhaps a little late to speak of permanent vines but as most of these are handled from pots there is time yet for several weeks to plant them.

Of all climbers there is of course nothing for clinging to a wall without support equal to the Ampelopsis Veitchii, alias Boston ivy, alias Japan ivy. It will grow on and adhere to glass as well as a brick wall. It should always be planted close to the wall but a cubic foot or so of good soil prepared for it. Dormant plants should always be planted, for any growth made under glass will be injured by late frosts. The root can be strong but all growth that will be of any use must start from the bottom and do its own climbing. It's a little slow the first year and sometimes brings a growl from a customer, but from that on its progress is rapid. Millions are planted and cover mansions and cottages and churches throughout the land and millions more will be planted.

Our native Ampelopsis quinquefolia or Virginia Creeper is often used for the same purpose but I am sure there are two varieties of this. One that does stick close and the other but poorly. Their place is for an arbor or fence or to cover the stump of an old tree that has been left standing on the lawn. For the roof of a summer house the Aristolochia Sipho is almost unequalled. Its beautiful large leaves look cool and it's a grand grower.

Bignonia (Trumpet Creeper) is a fine plant for the pillar of verandas, or if supported on some frame makes a most decorative clump for the lawn. For verandas, or in fact anywhere that a climber is desirable the honeysuckle should be used. What is known as Hall's Evergreen is one of the best.

The graceful wistaria is no more than hardy in this latitude and difficult to get started. Yet you do see occasionally a beautiful specimen that has become firmly established and bearing hundreds of its laburnum-like lavender flowers. It should be more often seen and is worth protecting for the first few years.

Actinidia polygama is spoken of highly. Its flowers and fruit are both beautiful but I am not certain of its hardiness as far north as this. However, it is a Japanese plant and that says a good deal for its hardiness.

I have left to the last a most beautiful genus of our flowering climbers, the clematis. I think in this city there are as many fine masses of C. Jackmani as will be seen in any city, and what is there more gorgeous? Yet for the thousands that are planted but few succeed. The Holland plants that we import have an enormous bunch of roots and plenty of top but from some cause or other they have a nasty way of going dead after being planted a few months and often the second year. Cut away or thin out at least half the roots and spread the remainder well out when planting. C. Jackmani is the best of its color and C. Henryi is the best white. But there are many other beautiful varieties of this large-flowered clematis which are known as the lanuginosa or Jackmani type. With less brilliant flowers, but quite as valuable as decorative plants, are other species of clematis and of them all I place C. paniculata ahead. It is so absolutely hardy and free to grow and in August and September it would take a real poet to do its beauty justice. It is like a wreath of snow blown in fantastic shape and clinging to the veranda or fence. C. coccinea is very distinct, not so rampant a grower but very desirable, and so distinct from all others of its genus. C. flammula, though modest in flower beside the Jackmani type, is most useful where a free growth and lots of vine is needed.

I meant to say in connection with the Clematis Jackmani and its varieties that the home-grown American stock is much better to plant than the large roots from Holland and Belgium. They may not make as much show at the start but the chances of permanent success with them are much greater.

I don't pretend to have exhausted the list of hardy vines but those mentioned are among the best, and my object in this brief article on them is for the reason that the florist who does a retail business at his greenhouse, even if he makes no pretention to plant a hedge or supply shrubs, will be sure to be asked repeatedly for them. They can be purchased of our leading nurserymen, and afford you a good profit, and it takes but little room to keep a stock of a few hundred assorted climbers. What you don't sell this spring can be kept in pots and plunged out of doors, and stored away in cold frames next winter and are then the best of stock for another year. Plants that you handle by the thousand or tens of thousands such as geraniums, coleus and cannas, ets., you know all about. It is the more permanent and less familiar plants that you need a little education on.

Annual Vines.

There is also a good demand for the tender or annual vines. If not all annual we treat them largely as such. The Cobæa scandens is perhaps the freest growing of all. Hope you have a good lot just now in 3 or 4-inch pots just beginning to climb, and don't neglect to give a slender stake of 2 feet, or they will get so mixed up you can never untangle them.

A less-known beautiful climber or twiner or runner is Pilogyne suavis, now I believe, called the Minnesota vine. Might as well call it the Sioux City Cyclone, for it is cyclonic in its growth when it once starts. Plants even propagated now are in plenty of time. Do not expect it to grow over 10 feet in height, but I know of nothing that will form so perfect a veil of growth. Its flower is insignificant. Its foliage is all you want, and when brushed against or disturbed it has a faint but agreeable musk odor. This is a difficult plant to winter and although not a seasonable hint it is worth recording that although growing it for 20 years we found out by accident more about how to winter it last year than ever before. A very few plants in 5-inch pots grown last summer were cut off a foot or so from the pot and placed under a carnation bench where they may have got a drop or two of water during winter, but I think not. Middle of March they were very dry but showing signs of growth. Being given light and water they started to send out their slender growths at a great rate and gave us all the cuttings we wanted, which root like the proverbial weed. It simply won't grow in the winter and wants to rest. (We have none to sell.)

For very tall arbors or trellises there is nothing more beautiful than the moon flower. You should be supplied with plenty of healthy young plants, for they are sure to be called for.

Lophospermum is a good summer vine of not too rampant a growth, and the tall-growing nasturtiums, particularly the Lobbianum varieties, are very desirable.

The Cypress vine, Balloon vine, convolvulus, etc., are usually raised from seed, and our customers can manage those things themselves.

Fire Heat.

It occurs to me just at this date to remind those who have had but a limited experience, or those who know better but are foolishly economical over their coal bill, that for the next three weeks or really to the end of this month, the very poorest economy is to try to do without some fire heat. I was rather surprised to hear Mr. J. A. Valentine of Denver, say this winter that they never let their fire out, and that is a city of brightest sun, but the nights are cool. There are many plants, and important ones, that need no fire nor have they perhaps for two or three weeks past. Carnations I will cite as the best example, providing you left air on, and some of our soft-wooded plants, geraniums for instance, if with a clear glass over them and air on all damp days and nights may do very well. But the very worst conditions for most of our plants is a close, damp, cold atmosphere.

If you stop your fire heat just now your coleus will stand still, and worse, your begonias will rot; your cannas will cease to grow; even your fuchsias will be stunted, and there will be a state of arrested development in the whole establishment. You must remember that most of the plants we grow in the greenhouse are either of tropical or subtropical origin and from the genial warmth and circulation of air which a little heat and a little ventilation produces, to the cold dampness of a shut up and fireless house is most disastrous.

I won't enter here into the big question of roses without heat at this time of year but the man who would attempt to economize on fuel at this time of year with his tea roses deserves to pay interest on his overdue taxes.

William Scott.

CARNATION NOTES.

If you have not already put a light shade on your carnation houses it is about time you were putting on some lime wash. We have noticed a number of places round about our city that have had shade on their glass for several weeks, in fact, as soon as it began to get warm, and the blooms that come from those places show it too. We have this day, May 3rd, put on our first shade for this season, and our carnation blooms are very nearly as good in quality as they were in March, in spite of the mercury being up to 93 in the shade today, and above 85 a number of days recently. An abundance of water and air is far better for them than all the shade you can put on the glass and if it were not for the sun bleaching the color out of the bloom I would not be in a hurry about putting on shade yet. Such varieties as Flora Hill, E. Crocker, Mrs. Joost and a few others delight in plenty of sunshine, but the sun takes the color out of the blooms so badly, and therefore just the least bit of shade will do no harm to the plants, and a great deal of good to the half-open blooms.

Whatever shade you put on now you put on to stay for the summer, and so you should put on something which will stick fairly well. We have never yet found anything that is better than lime prepared as follows: Take fresh lump lime and slake with water and allow to cool. Then add enough water to thin it down so you can spray it on with a hand syringe and add a handful of salt to about 3 gallons of whitewash. The salt will make it stick, but if the lime is of good quality we sometimes leave out the salt. Spray this on with the hand syringe and as you force it out of the nozzle make a long sweep so that the stream of liquid will be broken up into countless drops and cover the glass with spots from ¼ to ½ inch in diameter. With a little practice you will soon be able to do this nicely; one of the main points is to stand well away from the spot you wish to cover and make the long sweeping movement.

The one great objection to this method of application is that the lime will eat the paint off the bars on the outside and expose the wood, necessitating repainting every season or two. That is why some growers still cling to the old-fashioned whitewash brush and paint down the center of the glass. This latter method takes about ten times as long as the former and if you have to apply it a few times in a season you can put a coat of paint on the bars and still be ahead. Some use white lead and naphtha, but we do not like it, as it has to be rubbed off in the fall if you want it off before severe freezing sets in. The lime-wash can be made less adhesive as the season grows late, and the last application can be made so that a good rain will take most of it off. I have known growers to put in the lime-wash just enough soot to give it a grayish color, but I could never get a good reason out of any of them for doing it. You do not want your houses darkened by the shade any more than is absolutely necessary; all you want is to break the force of the sun.

If you haven't all your young plants out in the field you should be getting them out as rapidly as possible. Every day lost now means a good deal lost next fall and early winter, as you must have strong plants to house if you expect a good crop of blooms early in the season.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

With the advent of warm weather Brides and Bridesmaids will soon begin to show signs of deterioration. This can be prevented in a great measure by timely mulching, putting it on rather heavy; a good inch thick is none too much.

After applying the mulch care should be taken that the soil in the bench does not become dry; the mulch absorbs and retains the moisture and to all appearance the bench is wet enough, but a careful examination will often reveal the fact that is is simply wet on the surface. From now on the benches should receive a thorough soaking twice a week during bright weather, and should never be allowed to become dry. As the mulch will soon become exhausted, giving liquid food once a week will also help to keep up the quality. Keeping the night temperature as near 56 degrees as the season will admit of and giving plenty of ventilation during the day is about all that can be done and if this is faithfully attended to the quality may be kept up a few weeks longer.

In most houses about this season, owing to defects in the glass, some of the foliage will be apt to get burned. This is very annoying and usually a good deal of damage is done, especially in Beauty houses, before it is detected. To prevent this the house should be gone carefully over when the sun is shining and with a brush tied to a long stake, touch the burning spots lightly with linseed oil. It may take a few days to find all the spots, but it will pay in the end.

AZALEAS—GENISTAS—HIBISCUS.

A subscriber asks for the method of propagating the above.

Briefly, almost all the Indian azaleas (the azalea of the greenhouse man) are propagated by grafting. The half-ripened wood of the choice varieties is grafted on some quick-growing, vigorous variety or rather species, such as old A. indica alba. Now I won't pretend to tell you the details of the operation of grafting, but doubtless it differs but slightly from grafting other plants that are not deciduous, viz.: Kept close till adhesion has taken place and then given every encouragement to grow. The Belgians have reduced this to an exact science and it would be futile for you to attempt to go into the business. In fact they not only graft, but grow for two or three years an azalea and sell it in such size and condition that they have no opposition.

Before we imported to any extent a few firms in this country grew a few azaleas from cuttings and they made dwarf, bushy plants, but as a handsome plant they were not in it compared with those we now import, and 30 years ago there was but one azalea sold where now there is a thousand. You can root the young growths in January and February. The cutting does not want to be too succulent. The cuttings need bottom heat and should be kept rather close. They will root in five or six weeks. During the first summer it is a hard job to keep spider and thrips off them as it is difficult to get water enough under their leaves. The second summer the little plants can be planted out, and so you go, but it is not worth the going.

The cytisus or genista is propagated readily from cuttings during the winter months. The tips of the growths will root but it is better to take off a small branch, say a little spray with three or four shoots, but not over three inches long. When you have this rooted you have a good start toward a compact plant.

The hibiscus will root from cuttings (not too soft a growth) any time during winter. When your propagating bench stands at 60 to 65 degrees and the air of the house is at 50 degrees you have got the right conditions for both the cytisus and the hibiscus.

INJURED PALM LEAVES.

The specimens of injured palm leaves forwarded by "A Subscriber" are evidently sun-burned, the mischief having been done by defective glass in the roof of the greenhouse.

These accidents frequently happen early in the season before one notices that the sun has gained so much strength, and the only remedy is found in shading the glass before such an injury can occur.

We usually find it needful to apply a light shading on the west side of our palm houses by the first week of March if the weather is bright, and the east side also needs some protection by about March 15 to 20.

VIOLETS IN PITS.

What must I do with my violets that are in pits? Must I separate them and set them out in the field so they will form clumps for the cold frames next fall? This is my first spring in the business.

H. J. B.

Much depends upon the condition the violet clumps are now in. If they have been allowed to run for the past few weeks he should find plenty of young runners that are strong and healthy and with nice young roots. If, as I take it by his question, he desires to grow his violets next season in the same frames he should lift these clumps with care, carefully cutting off all these strong rooted runners and either prick them out in flats or pot them up, as is most convenient, and place them in a light place without direct sunlight and with plenty of air, but not draughts (which would spoil them), before taking hold of the new soil, as in the case of any cuttings freshly potted up.

Then the frames should be cleaned out put in repair for another season, and new soil put in as I described a few weeks ago in my violet notes. Then unless your frames are in a hot situation you should plant your new stock right where you wish the plants to grow, giving them the same care as I have described in late numbers of the Review.

A Floral Scales

If your present old clumps are strong and healthy and have made a nice growth you should have plenty of stock so that you can grow a lot on in the field also to make good any occasional failure in the frames in the fall. Of course you will want to give them all the air possible and they should have a lath or similar shading all summer, and this should be high enough to work under and give free circulation of air.

I may add that it is useless to attempt to make any stock from the old hard wooded portion of the clumps.

BUSINESS METHODS FOR BUSY FLORISTS.

III.

In our previous articles we endeavored to suggest and point out the way in which daily, weekly and annual records of the output of each house of a range might be kept. In this article we shall dwell more particularly on sales records and hope to offer a few pertinent and helpful thoughts on the subject.

No branch of a small business is so apt to be overlooked as the sales record, and none should be more carefully kept. Many business firms owe their failure to succeed to loose and poorly kept sales records. Two fundamental laws should govern all sales: First, never sell any but perishable goods at a loss, and those only when compelled to; second, never make any sales without a complete record of it. The matter of fixing prices I will take up in detail in a later chapter.

Keep an accurate itemized record of each sale you make whether for cash or credit. Provide yourself with duplicate sales slips, such as department stores use. If there is more than one salesman on the premises let each one have a number, and a block of sales slips, which should be numbered consecutively. When a sale is made it is itemized on the sales slip, the duplicate copy given to the customer, the original kept for your own record. If the sale be charged the duplicate will serve as a bill to the customer. At the close of the day's business ascertain if you have all the consecutive numbers of your sales slips, total the cash sales, and credit them on your cash book in a lump sum. Post direct from the charge slips to your ledger and file your charge slips in a convenient file for the month.

For a small business, or one of considerable magnitude, an ordinary indexed box file can be used. Many good firms still use day book and journal, but advanced methods of accounting abolish intermediate records and post direct from original transactions to the permanent records, thus avoiding unnecessary work and errors in copying. Some concerns copy all sales in a sales book and post from that, some copy all bills and use the copy for a sales book, while one firm in the writer's acquaintance files the sales slip in a self-indexing, expansive ledger file, using it as a ledger entry and making the original sales slip the permanent ledger record. There are objections to each of these systems. What is adapted to one business may not be to another, and vice versa.

If your business is of sufficient magnitude you have, or should have, a competent bookkeeper. If you do not employ a competent bookkeeper your own knowledge of accounts may suggest the best system for your individual requirements. If your knowledge of bookkeeping is limited, it will pay you to employ a good accountant for a few evenings to start you right. No rule or set of rules for accounting will apply to each and every business. The most that they can do will be to suggest a system that will be adapted to your business.

Whatever methods of accounting you may adopt, bear in mind that the success of any line of business depends upon strict attention to details. These details, like the stones in the basement wall of a modern sky-scraper building, are the foundation for all successful business ventures.

If you have been negligent of details in the past, as I know many of you have been, right about face and start right at once. Don't delay or put it off to a "more convenient" time. If you do that time will never come.

Upon the permanent past records of a business its future success is built. If your sales a year ago were greater than they are today ascertain wherein the deserepancy lies. If a clerk is dishonest your chances of detecting it are a hundred-fold better if you have been systematic than if not. If you are a grower and your output is just as large, but receipts smaller, seek a better market and endeavor to increase your receipts. If you are a retailer and receipts are smaller while expenses are larger, you can discover the leakage and apply the remedy twice as quickly if your business is systematically conducted.

In every business the receipts keep the wheels running. The careful, systematic record of sales is one of the most, if not the very most, important branch of any business.

ANOTHER FLORAL SCALES.

In response to our request for photographs of designs Mr. Albert Reichspfarr, Richmond, Ky., sends us the photo from which the accompanying engraving is made and which shows another treatment of the "Scales of Justice" illustrated in our issue of May 1. This design was ordered by the Richmond Bar for the funeral of the late Judge Scott, of Richmond. The flowers used were roses, carnations, valley, smilax and adiantums.

KEEPING CARNATIONS.

I can go Van Bergen one week better on keeping carnations. Last January I placed a vase of fourteen Mrs. Bradt in my parlor, changing water every morning and clipping off a bit of the stems every other day, and it was after the 28th day before they showed a sign of going to sleep. For two days after that I had them on the table in my dining room. Have had Crocker and Rose Queen hold up their heads for eighteen and twenty days.

I forgot to say the temperature in parlor averaged 46 degrees; no fire except in hall, and partly dark room. Now I think this a good record for both.

W. T. Hamilton.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut-flower market is quiet, with considerable surplus stock on the street. Sweet peas are moving well at from 50 cents to $1 per 100, the white and lavender bringing the latter price. Kaiserins are becoming more plentiful; they are hardly so popular as Brides so long as that variety is at its best, owing to their bruising so easily. Beauties have fallen a little more in price, the very best bringing $2.50 to $3 per doz. Extra long stems are more plentiful than shorts, necessitating the use of the shears at times. When the prices won't go up the stems must come down. This rose is remarkably good value now. Brides and Maids bring $4 to $6. Carnations are very hard to sell; a great many are on the street; good stock brings $2; a few Prosperity, $5. Lilacs are everywhere; 5 cents a bunch is the retail price on the street, so the commission men won't handle them.

Notes.

It is said that H. H. Battles is building a new greenhouse on his farm at Newtown Square.

Paxon G. James, of Roxborough, has earned a reputation for his California violets the past season. They have been going to Eugene Bernheimer and S. S. Pennock.

The Florists' Club meeting was held on Tuesday evening in Horticultural Hall.

Frank Miles Day, the newly elected member of the Germantown Horticultural Society, has achieved a high reputation as an architect, and his design has lately been selected from those of many competitors for the new Municipal Hospital in the District of Columbia, which is to be the finest hospital in the country. His interest in floriculture is shown by an Italian garden which he has constructed on his own place in Germantown, and which is much admired.

Waterfield & Ramsey have succeeded John F. Duncan as owners of the Butler place at Wyndmoor, adjoining Edwin Lonsdale's. This place sent some very good Maids to Edward Reid's during the past season, equal to the best it was said.

It is with deep regret I chronicle the sad accident to David Cliffe, of Germantown. He wore a pair of shoes with nails through the inside and from this came soreness in the foot that caused gangrene, necessitating the removal of one leg. His condition after the operation was so serious that grave apprehensions are felt as to the result. Mr. Cliffe is a well known retail florist, having greenhouses and a store at Main and Johnson streets, in a built up part of Germantown.

Wyndmoor.

Myers & Samtman, jocosely styled the amateur rose growers, are building a very fine American Beauty house. This house is being built opposite their present range of houses at a slightly different angle, it being 15 degrees east of south, while the present range is 30 degrees east of south. The new house will be 134 feet long by 86 feet wide and is built in three sections, making virtually three houses 134x28, open between. The houses are 12 feet 9 inches high at the ridge, even span, the roof bars being at an angle of 35 degrees. The walls are 8 feet high, supported by exceptionally heavy cedar posts measuring fully 7 inches in diameter at the top. A row of 2-inch iron posts supports the ridge; two rows of 1-inch iron pipe support the lower angle irons on each side, the upper angle irons being braced by a triangular arrangement reaching to and braced by the ridge support. The ventilators are 8 feet long by 3 feet wide. The gutters are Lord & Burnham's new improved style, very securely fastened and firmly supported by iron posts set in cement. There is a drip conductor on the inside for the grooved bars and an outlet every 30 feet so that a fall of four inches in the whole length is deemed ample. The first section is already nearly glazed, the glass (16x24) being put in the 24-inch way. This is the second time this has been done near Philadelphia, the Floral Exchange place at Edgely being the pioneers in this line.

The front and back walls have each 4 feet of glass surface, the glass in this case being reversed and set the narrow way to strengthen the plates. The ventilators will be worked by the Evans Challenge machines. The lumber throughout is of the very best, cypress being used everywhere, even to the benches. The firm does not believe in hemlock tables—they wear out too quickly. The arrangement of space inside is excellent, economizing every inch of room. There will be twelve tables, each 5 feet wide, with walk around the outside. This brings a bench next each gutter support between sections and a walk on the other side. Six thousand Beauties will be planted in this new range, or as many in the three sections as in four of the present houses, a considerable gain when cost and maintainance are counted. A 100-horse power return tubular boiler will be added to reinforce the present heating force to supply the steam needed. A very fine lot of young Beauties are coming on in small pots (about 30,000); about two-thirds for own use, the other third for selling.

One cannot but be impressed by the business methods shown by the firm. The best of materials, every detail carefully considered, courage and ability shown in growing a specialty, and the care taken in marketing the product. All important factors in achieving success.

BUFFALO.

Nothing of a startling nature has occurred within a few weeks. The proverbial April showers have extended into May and vegetation is quite a few days ahead of the average season. Either business has been very good or the supply of flowers has been quite limited, for there has been no surplus of flowers either by the home producer or the supply that is received daily by our wholesaler, Mr. Kasting, and if everybody who works for a day's wages doesn't strike for higher pay we are likely to have a prosperous spring.

Carnations have never kept up their price better than this year. Good roses are not over plentiful and return prices to the grower that must be profitable for this time of year. Bulbons stuff (that means flowers) that came in a week or two before the outside grown has been quite profitable.

There is to be another store or two in town. W. J. Palmer & Son will soon have a branch store and it is the choice of all locations, on the corner of Genesee and Main, for many years the site of the old Diehl drug store. You well remember, brothers and sisters, the Pan-Am. doctor-mayor of last year. A handsome building will go up and part of it will be occupied by W. J. P. & Son. I admire "Billy's" pluck, energy and industry. You have to trot pretty fast to keep within speaking distance of him.

The other establishment is a consummated fact. The rather modest entrance to our beautiful Forest Lawn Cemetery on Main street was recently removed a block south, and an attempt to make a grand entrance was made. The location and the surrounding grounds are very fine, but the architecture of the building, or gate, costing some $40,000, is horrible. For an entrance to a convent or quarantine hospital it would be good. However, there is no accounting for what a dozen wealthy gentlemen will do. One has made his fortune as a dry goods merchant, another with feeling your pulse or looking at your tongue, another handled grain, another had a wealthy grandmother, but they are all leading citizens and of course they know. I don't suppose there is a leading cemetery in this great country that is so absolutely run by one man power as this Forest Lawn, and the man is George Troup, and if they had left the department of architecture to him as they leave everything else, the whole thinking and observing part of our city would feel better. It looks now as if the money ran out and it was waiting for next year's appropriation, like a government breakwater.

Near this entrance on Main street Mr. George Troup has opened for his sons a nice office for the sale of plants and flowers and incidentally every other business that should drift his way. Mrs. David Newlands, many years established, is about as near the entrance on Delavan avenue, but there is room for all in this fast developing country.

A very sad accident occurred on the Saturday before Easter which I had not thought (or had not time) previously to report. Mrs. Kloko, a widow florist of the West Side, hired a man (with his wagon), and he was a good gardener at that, to deliver her orders. All went right up to 5 p. m., when he went off with another load. No word was heard from him till early the next morning, when it was found that the man, horse and wagon, had been pulled out of the Erie canal at 10 p. m. the night before, everything drowned except the wagon, and no accounting for the sad accident.

Peter Reinberg.

Peter Reinberg, Chicago.

A recent automobile ride through the sixteen acres of glass at Summerdale (walking is too slow if you expect to see it all in one day) revealed the fact that Peter Reinberg has faith in Liberty. He is largely increasing the space devoted to it and will this season bench 30,000 plants. These will include quite a few old plants that he will bloom another season, merely lifting and replanting in fresh soil. The carried-over plants did finely this season and he will try it again on a larger scale. He is also carrying over many of his Beauties, replanted in fresh soil of course. The plants carried over from last season furnished the finest flowers this season and lots of them. The old plants are lifted, pruned back and established in 4-inch pots before being replanted on the bench.

Referring to Liberty Mr. Geo. Collins, the able foreman, says this variety seems to do best in a temperature of 55 to 56 degrees.

Several houses are being planted with the new rose Sunrise, for which Mr. Reinberg thinks there will be a place. Several houses of Perles were looking well and we were told that the blooms had been in excellent demand all the season. It certainly is strange that Perle has been so generally discarded when there is no other yellow rose to take its place.

Mme. Chatenay has made a favorable impression here and the "acreage" will be increased this season. Ivory will be on trial and its parent, Golden Gate, will have fully as much room as before. The usual immense quantities of Beauties and Brides and Maids will be benched, many of the last two being grafted plants. Experience to date indicates that the grafted plants are decidedly worth the additional expense and labor, much more than making this up by the increased value of the cut.

In white carnations Mr. Reinberg will this season bench about the same number of Flora Hill as last year, but the number of White Cloud will be much reduced, the color not being pure enough and other faults lessening its value. The space devoted to Pera will be largely increased, and he considers this the best paying white on the place. Norway is still on trial and about the same number will be planted as last year. Hoosier Maid is considered favorably and will have a little more room, as is also Bon Homme Richard, which is certainly a very free bloomer.

In pink sorts Lawson will have more room than before, as will also Guardian Angel, the pink sport from Armazindy. And by the way this variety has held its color up to date better than any of the other pinks, as well as being a wonderful bloomer and very fragrant. Mr. Reinberg considers it the biggest money maker among the pinks. Genevieve Lord has been very free, in fact almost as free as Guardian Angel, but it does not keep or hold its color as well. Marquis will have as much space as before and would receive more favorable consideration if it began business earlier in the season. Joost will be dropped entirely, while Morning Glory will be more largely planted than before. Mrs. Higinbotham, the new light pink, is well thought of and considerable space will be given it.

In reds, Chicago heads the list here, and the blooms class with Lawson as to price in the market. He will go in heavy on Estelle and will plant as many Crane as ever, but will largely reduce the quantity of America. Mrs. L. Ine is a popular variety here. While not as large as other reds it is a great producer and quite profitable. Mrs. Potter Palmer, the new red, will have considerable space. Evanston has been dropped.

Mr. Reinberg grows no yellows or crimsons.

In the variegated class he will plant Mrs. Bradt more largely than ever. Prosperity will be tried another year. Some fine blooms have been produced this season and there were usually many buds in sight, but the cut of blooms was decidedly not what it should have been. As a fancy, however, it is needed and will be tried again.

He will also have on trial all the leading new sorts and hopes to find some good ones among them.

M. Weber is in charge of the carnations here and the immense number of them must keep him busy.

Mr. Reinberg is now filling out an odd corner of his sixteen acres with five new houses, each 27x250. The Garland iron gutter and post construction is used and we noted that the benches were supported by 4 to 6-inch tiles on end, resting on a brick foundation, except where the stringers met, and here the usual wooden post was used. These houses will have to be the last new houses here unless additional land is purchased.

Just south of them is a field of eleven acres of carnation plants, the planting out having just been completed, but it is leased land, Mr. Reinberg having now covered his 16½ acres solid with glass except a half acre reserved for his residence and lawn. He may be building greenhouses over that next year just to keep his hand in.

But he still has a field in the building line in New Castle, Ind. He is senior member of the firm of Reinberg & Weiland, which now has at New Castle ten houses each 27½x300, and there is the state of Indiana supplying excellent building sites all around them. The New Castle establishment is in charge of Mr. Peter Wieland, who has a few ideas on building himself.

Mr. Reinberg is still a young man, being only 42 years of age. We present an excellent portrait herewith. Nearly all this great range of glass has been erected since 1887, when the brothers started with a range of houses containing about 20,000 square feet of glass that had formerly been devoted to the growing of vegetables.

As a mere incident Mr. Reinberg has this year produced and sold about $10,000 worth of rooted rose and carnation cuttings, doing the largest business in this line of any year so far. This is of course a trifle compared to the returns from the cut flower output, but is interesting as showing the continued increase in the call for this stock.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The business for May Day week began here with a slight scarcity of carnations and violets and closed with empty chests so far as violets and bulb material were concerned. The rise of the sweet pea crop to sizable proportions was also a feature of the week. These are selling well at from $1 to $1.50 per 100. Pinks run from 1 to a possible 4 cents, with good ordinaries about 2 cents. Roses are plentiful in all colors, sizes, prices and conditions.

Pointers.

Tenants are rushing into the new Paddock building on the site of old Horticultural Hall. One fine apartment on the street floor is labeled "Paddock Florist," with information that Mrs. G. A. Sutherland will very shortly occupy it. There is an old classic relating to the demise of a donkey before he could decide which one of three hay stacks to patronize. It will be almost as hard for customers to decide in future which Bromfield street floral emporium to visit.

By the way, Sutherland shows a magnificent line of metal wreaths, etc., for Memorial Day at his Hawley street headquarters. The best I have ever seen.

There is a magnificent display of plant life at the auction sales on that street also.

The Salesman and the "Lob."

A Boston rose salesman, an unfortunate slob,
Out to dinner last week encountered a lob.
'Twas a mild-mannered brute of a lively red hue,
And the salesman approached with no more ado.
In full view of his lobship he opened his jaw,
Raised up the crustacean and bit off his off claw.
Brave was his manner, his words full of scoff;
Right proud was his carriage as he clawed the claw off.
He bit but this bit, but this bit was bitter.
The fit that was fit could not fit any fitter.
The man knew the lob felt at home in the brine,
So he swallowed a beer and eke a small wine.
Two hours later said fish rose in his ire;
His feathers all bristled, his breath full of fire.
He fell on this salesman with blood in his eye;
He tore him asunder and smote hip and thigh.
He ripped up his back and he ripped his front down,
Not an organ left whole from his feet to his crown.
With a yell in his language, meaning, "Pike's Peak, or bust!"
He went through that man like a horse-rake through dust.
He left the poor man in a mix of a fix,
And put a face on him like half-past six!

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The recent warm weather brought out the flowers in abundance and though demand held up splendidly till last Saturday, since then it has fallen off sadly. On Tuesday the dealers were feeling rather glum. There was a big accumulation of everything and almost no buyers. Roses have deteriorated considerably in quality and there is precious little first class stock to be had. For what few shipping orders there are great piles of roses have to be sorted over to get out a few hundred that will stand the test. For these $5 a hundred is the price, a fair range in quotations being from $2 to $5 with the poorest being jobbed off at as low as $1.

Carnations hold their quality better, though naturally somewhat soft after so much damp weather, but there are tons of them and prices are weak. It takes a mighty fine flower to bring more than $2 and the bulk of the good stock is sold at $1 to $1.50, and large lots of under grade stuff have been cleaned up at as low as $4 and $5 a thousand.

Good Beauties hold their own best among roses and the best still bring $2.50 to $3 a dozen. From this prices range down to as low as $1 a hundred for poor shorts.

Some of the commission men are literally buried in lilac. Immense lots are coming in and there is no way to move it. The street men are badly missed by the wholesalers now.

The first paeonies of the season arrived at Kennicott's Saturday and they have moved very well so far. But as soon as they cease to be a novelty it is feared they may class with the lilac if present conditions continue.

The weather bureau reports a cold wave on the way from the northwest and conditions may change by the time this is in print.

Various Notes.

We much regret to have to announce that Louis Gregor, for the last few years with the Harms Park Floral Co., in which he had an interest, took his own life last Saturday morning. He first threw himself in front of an elevated railway train, but the motorman managed to stop his train in time. He was taken from the track, and the railway attaches, realizing the man was practically insane, sent for the police. But before they arrived Mr. Gregor managed to break away from those watching him and taking a knife from his pocket severed his jugular vein. He was dead when the officers arrived. For some time past Mr. Gregor had given evidences of an unbalanced mind, but such a tragic result was entirely unlooked for. It is a very sad affair. He was in the prime of life and leaves a wife and family.

Mr. Gladiolus Thompson, South Haven, Mich., was a visitor Tuesday.

The American Rose Co., Washington, D. C., offers prizes of $100, $50 and $25 for best 50 cut blooms of Ivory roses to be competed for at the fall exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago. The roses must be exhibited by the grower thereof, and must be purchased by said grower from the American Rose Co. or through its authorized agents. No exhibitor to receive more than one prize.

One thing that the retailers and the wholesalers should get together on is the question of permitting flowers to be used at the local school closings. By acting together and vigorously they could undoubtedly secure a reversal of the order now in force forbidding the use of flowers at these public events. Now is the time to do the work.

Wietor Bros. have planted four houses of the new white rose Ivory. They are also planting other roses early, having already planted three houses of Liberty, six of Meteor, three of Golden Gate, two of La France and two of Kaiserin. Their two new houses for chrysanthemums are already completed and the posts are up for their range of five new rose houses, each 33x300.

C. Neilsen & Son have started into the business at 594 North Lincoln St., having acquired the greenhouses of C. Paasch at that location. Mr. Paasch retains his store on Clybourn avenue.

The husband of Mrs. A. Hertel, the Clybourn avenue florist, died last Sunday.

George Reinberg has the iron posts in position for his new range of glass at Summerdale.

L. Coatsworth has returned from a week's visit to New York and vicinity.

Bassett & Washburn have all their carnations planted out in the field. They have already completed the replanting of over a dozen of their rose houses, and are using all grafted stock this year, being convinced that it pays.

Alex Newett is now with J. B. Deamud.

Lee Walz is now behind the counter at John Mangel's.

N. A. Schmitz, for many years gardener at the Guardian Angel Orphan Asylum, is now with Peter Reinberg at Summerdale.

Leonard Kill struck out a birthday Wednesday, but won a home run at a surprise party in the evening.

McKellar & Winterson Co. keep enlarging their supply department and their business in this line. Mr. Degnan says that the business of the new seed department is fully up to expectations, and the outlook is very encouraging.

A GROUP OF FERNS.

A beautifully arranged group of ferns of many species and in various sizes is shown in the accompanying illustration which has been reproduced from the Gardeners' Chronicle, and such a group would attract much attention even in these days of wonderful roses and four-inch carnation flowers.

In the arrangement of this group an effort seems to have been made to show distinct forms and also to arrange them artistically and the result is a decided success. Beginning with the foreground at the right of the picture we find an uncommon species in the form of a pan filled with Meniscium simplex, a simple leaved fern of moderate growth, and one that is almost a semi-aquatic in its habits. Not a fern for the trade, but one that is both odd and interesting, and well worthy of a place in a private collection.

Next to this in the front rank is one of the crested forms of Pteris cretica, probably P. cretica Childsii, and this in turn may be considered among the most valuable of trade species, for among the many forms of P. cretica are found some of the most useful ferns for fern dishes and other decorative work, these pteris being very easy to raise, quick in growth and having foliage of good texture.

Back of the pteris we find a good-sized plant of Davallia solida, a strong growing member of the hare's-foot ferns that produces fronds two to three feet long, finely divided, and of good substance, a fern of merit and one that would probably prove acceptable for decorative work if it could be had in quantity.

Returning toward the front line and near the center of the picture is found another simple leaved fern of rather massive outline, and one that is but seldom seen, namely, Hymenodium crinitum. This fern is a West Indian species and in large specimens sometimes produces fronds 18 inches to two feet in height, dark green in color, and having a sprinkling of stiff, black hairs all over the fronds. The fertile fronds of the hymenodium are not quite so large as the sterile ones, but are also very singular from the fact that the under side of the frond is completely covered with a thick brown coating of spores.

Right behind the hymenodium are seen the long and graceful fronds of Adiantum peruvianum, the large light green pinnæ of which look white in the picture. This is one of the very best of the large growing adiantums for exhibition purposes, is a warm house species, and created quite a sensation among fern growers at the time of its introduction some twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Somewhat indistinctly, and to the left of the hymenodium, we see some fronds of a rather rare adiantum, namely A. curvatum, a very handsome species but one that is somewhat particular in its requirements, one of those requirements being that it shall be well shaded, and another that the soil in which it is grown shall be rather coarse and open and largely composed of peat.

Still further to the left we find a singular looking tall plant that at the first glance does not remind us of the conventional idea of a fern, but a second look shows that it is a Japanese climbing fern, Lygodium scandens, trained on a conical trellis. This species and also another member of the same genus, L. volubile, may be grown into quite attractive specimens by this method.

In the background is seen a stump on which various small growing ferns are planted, a natural and effective method of displaying them, for in their native places many ferns are found growing on the trunks and branches of trees.

The stag's horn ferns are also a prominent feature of the background, and from their singular form and the great distinction between the fertile and sterile fronds never fail to attract attention. Of these stag's horn ferns there are several species shown in the picture, that on the left being Platycerium æthiopicum, the one in the center and at the rear being one of the forms of P. alcicorne, and below that is seen a large specimen of P. Willinckii, a very handsome fern and one that has the peculiarity of producing its fertile fronds in threes, while on the extreme right and next to the tree fern is shown a good plant of P. grande, the latter species being one of the finest of this very interesting genus.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut-flower trade last week continued dull, though some were fortunate enough to have quite a lot of funeral work. The weather has been unusually warm and it feels more like July than May, and spring flowers of all kinds are in full bloom. Yesterday (Sunday) we had a young cyclone and a good deal of hail with the hard rain storm. It was the hardest rainfall we have had since the great cyclone in May, 1896. No damage from hail has as yet been reported by the florists.

The glut in carnations and roses is still with us, and never before were they sold so cheap down town as last week. All the wholesale houses are loaded down with all kinds of good stock and the fakir can get all his stock in St. Louis now and doesn't have to send to Chicago for cheap stock, where he claims plenty of stock can be had at all times and at prices to suit himself. Some of the down town florists are trying to compete with the street fakir. In this I think they make a great mistake and they will find it out sooner or later. Perhaps they haven't heard of the old saying, "Give a fool rope enough and he'll hang himself."

Prices are still very low. Some select stuff in Brides, Maids and Meteors went from $5 to $6, but nothing else brought over $3, and from that down to $1, with plenty of stock on hand to fill the biggest order.

Carnations are most plentiful and of good quality, also very cheap. About $5 per 1,000 is a fair estimate on what they sold for and $1 and $1.50 in 100 lots. All kinds went at these prices, and first-class stock at that. Flora Hill, Triumph, Joost and White Cloud are among the best in the market just now.

Good long sweet peas are selling well, especially pink and white. The price on these runs from 25 cents to $1 per 100. They are quite plentiful but are not a glut as yet, though there is no telling what will happen before the end of the week. Harrisiis are having a fair demand at 4 cents for shorts and 6 and 8 cents for long; callas go at $6 per 100.

Notes.

Wm. Trillow, of Chicago, came in on Sunday to call on his many friends in the trade.

Lloyd Vaughan, the popular salesman representing E. H. Hunt, Chicago, is expected here this week with a full line of florist's supplies.

Charlie Roper has returned to the city after three years' absence, and is now with C. C. Sanders on Delmar avenue. Charlie brought his wife with him.

Tom Peterson is doing jobbing work in the West End with plenty of work on hand. Tom and Charlie are old time members of our bowling club and we hope that they will pay us a visit some Monday night.

The meeting of the club this week will no doubt settle the question as to the smoker that the club will have some time this month for the good of the club.

Bowling.

The Bowling Club had a poor attendance on Monday night owing to the extreme heat. Six members were on hand when the bowling started. Kuehn showed the lead with 194 average, followed by Ellison and Ellis. This ended the first prize series. A. Y. Ellison, the scratch man, wins the first prize, with Ellis a good second. On next Monday night a new series of 12 games starts.

The following scores were made last (Monday) night.

POST CHECK MONEY.

The adoption of the proposed post check money would certainly greatly facilitate the forwarding of remittances through the mails and no one would suffer except the express companies who issue money orders.

Briefly the plan is to print bills of small denomination and fractional currency in the form of a check on the U. S. Treasury, this to pass from hand to hand as ordinary currency so long as the space for name of payee is blank. But when this space is filled by any one with the name of a particular payee and a postage stamp attached and cancelled it becomes payable to the payee only, and tampering with it is an offense subject to heavy punishment. With post check currency it would be unnecessary to go to the postoffice to buy a money order. The remitter would simply take blank currency from his pocket and in a moment convert it into an order payable only to the party to whom he wished to remit. No one else could realize upon it without committing forgery.

The plan is certainly worthy of adoption. The bill is now before congress and all interested should express their wishes to their senators and representatives in that body.

Business Conditions.

The weather is hot and every one knows what that means in the flower business. Ninety degrees in the shade is getting to be an every day occurrence, and of course stock is showing the effects of this kind of weather. Stock that is really first-class is scarce, but the demand for it is rather quiet, so the price is low. Second and third grade stock can scarcely be given away and some is cleaned up at $5 per 1,000 and even lower.

White stock is most in demand, and funeral work, of which there was a good amount, formed the greater part of the active trade. There were also a few weddings, but not enough stock was used to cut any ice, with the large supply coming in.

This is a time when the fakirs come in for their share of the business, and if it were not for them there is no question but that great quantities of stock which is now used by them would go to the dump and be a total loss to the grower.

There is a great quantity of longiflorum lilies coming in at present, and if it were not for the low price at which they are held they would not move at all; 50 to 75 cents per dozen for first-class stock and even lower for seconds.

Sweet peas are the best flower to be had at present. They sell on sight and readily realize 50 to 75 cents per 100. Violets are over.

General trade has been a little quiet, but everything considered it might be a great deal worse. Shipping trade is rather quiet. The hot weather and the out-door stock coming into bloom is gradually making itself known through a slackening up of this class of trade. Lilac, snowballs, etc., are coming into bloom now and the produce market is full of them. They undoubtedly turn a great deal of trade from the legitimate channels.

Pæonies are rapidly forming buds and it looks as if they will be in full crop too early for Decoration Day. A few cool days will hold them back, though.

At the next meeting of the Florists' Society, to be held Saturday, May 10, the nomination of the board of directors for the coming year will be in order.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held April 24, with President Scott in the chair.

Edw. Cosgrove, Henry Harms and Jas. Ballantyne were elected to membership and the following were proposed for membership: H. H. Rayner, Tarrytown; Wm. Hastings, Tuxedo Park; Robt. Borcham, Ardsley; Henry Kastberg, Dobb's Ferry.

W. R. Cobb, of Tarrytown, and N. E. Sands, of Ardsley, were elected honorary members.

It was decided to hold an exhibition in June and the executive committee was empowered to act.

The matter of incorporation was laid over for action at next meeting.

The schedules for the November show are now ready and copies may be had on application to the secretary, E. W. Newbrand, Tarrytown, N. Y.

An essay on "Our Outdoor Fruits" was read by Wm. Gomersall, of Fishkill, and after discussion of the subject the essayist was given the thanks of the society for his able paper.

H. J. Rayner, Cor. Sec'y.

Providence, R. I.—The Rhode Island Horticultural Society has issued its schedule of prizes for the June and November exhibitions. Copies may be had by addressing the secretary, C. W. Smith, 27 Exchange street, this city. The annual chrysanthemum show will be held November 13 and 14.

A French gardener has a novel way of handling delicate seedlings. He sows the seed in soil placed in half an egg shell with a hole in the bottom for drainage. These are placed in a flat of damp soil or moss. When the time arrives for transplanting the egg shell is broken and the operation is effected without in any way disturbing the roots of the little plant.

Rockford, Ill.—H. W. Buckbee is improving rapidly and it is expected will soon have fully recovered from the results of the recent accident.

Hoboken, N. J.—Bonnott Bros., have opened a floral store at 936 Washington street.

THE GOOD & REESE CO., SPRINGFIELD, O.

The Largest Rose Growers in the World.

BUTTE, MONT.

Business keeps up well. Some of the stores have cleaned up every day for the past ten days. Every bloom that could be cut, no matter what, was used up. Stock is very scarce. Funeral work of every description has been in demand and some swell dinners have helped to keep the florists busy. There has been an extra heavy demand for Beauties and Violets.

Frank J. Hill, formerly of Monticello, Ia., has taken a position at the Gregson plant. The Butte Floral Co.'s carnation crop is fine. They have a fine red seedling, a cross between Bon Ton and Chicago, that promises to be a winner.

James H. King of the Butte Floral Co. starts this week on a three-weeks' trip through Missouri and Iowa.

The State Nursery Co. have put in a new ice box and repapered their store. Mr. Clancey, formerly with Small & Sons, Washington, D. C., has taken a position in the store. RAMBLER.

In the Kansas City Star of April 27th appeared an interesting report of Mr. Taggart's plans regarding the flower show of 1902. Among other new features there will be several cash prizes for exhibits of flowers grown by the school children of the city. The judges announced in a previous issue of the Review have accepted. Superintendent Thorpe has been at work in the east for some weeks in behalf of the coming show.

Manistee, Mich.—The Manistee Floral Co. is a new concern here, with Mrs. Lena E. Cohn as manager. The company is erecting greenhouses.

Edgewater Park, N. J.—Mrs. Jos. Gill will build two greenhouses, one 15x50 and the other 21x60. W. D. & G. D. Hewett, Philadelphia, are the architects.

You have the best advertising paper in the country. I sold all my plants in two weeks by giving you my advertisement.—J. L. Elliott, Bethlehem, Pa.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

It seems to me that your report of the Easter trade in this city in your issue of April 3 needs some correction.

My observation was that decidedly the finest display was made by one of our prominent florists, who opened a large store in the center of the city for Easter week. He had three large windows and an immense floor space and there was room for two hundred people to walk about among the plants. The windows were each arranged differently and were certainly the most elaborate ever seen in this city.

The displays made by those mentioned by X. Y. Z. were very fine, but they could hardly be so effective as the one I refer to, where so much more room was available. I am forced to the conclusion that X. Y. Z. did not see the largest and finest Easter display in town, especially as he says there was plenty left over Sunday, whereas at the store I mention there was nothing left but a half-dozen spiræas and a few geraniums. And certainly he would not compare a display in a 20-ft. store with one in a store with 100 feet frontage and a depth of 125 feet. I venture to say that the windows alone of this store contained more stock than any other two florists had in their entire stores. I know that X. Y. Z. will be gratified to learn that New Bedord had something better than he knew of. F. P.

DENVER, COLO.

The spring flower show of the Florists' Club in City Park was opened by a May-pole dance by the children of one of the local schools, and the dance was witnessed by about 2,000 parents and friends.

The exhibition was a fine display and reflected much credit upon the club, in spite of an accident that threatened to spoil the show altogether. The exhibition was held in a large canvas tent in the park, and the day before the opening, while the florists were arranging their groups of plants, a gale of wind tore the canvas to pieces. But a force of men was put to work at once and the damage repaired in time for the opening.

The tent was lighted by incandescent lights incased in red tissue-paper shades.

Trade Notes.

For the past two weeks the weather has been causing the florists great anxiety. From 70 degrees in the shade it dropped next day below freezing, stayed cold several days, then warmed up and commenced to rain, and while it clears up and the sun shines brightly for a few hours at a time, occasionally it changes to a pouring rain as easily as a turtle slides off a log. Between drops the boys all hurried the carnation crops into the field to get the benefits of the weather, including a good soaking, and they are now wondering if the plants are not getting too much of a good thing.

Trade has continued fair, much better than was to be expected, the weather considered; shipping continues steady, using up all flowers. Carnations are blooming freely with prospects for a fine crop Decoration Day. Roses, which have been somewhat scarce, are now more nearly equal to the demand. Easter lilies are still in the market and come in handy for funeral work. Carnations range in price from 25 to 50 cents per doz.; roses, $1 to $1.25 per doz.; American Beauties, $1.50 to $3 per doz.; lilies, $1.50 per doz.

There is a change of administration which causes some speculation as to whether the superintendent of parks and the sexton of cemeteries will not be changed. Both positions, particularly the former, have been so ably filled that the florists are averse to a change and will so petition the mayor. The bedding in the city parks is equal to anything that can be seen in Chicago, lacking the extensiveness of the Chicago bedding, and a change would result disastrously to the best interests of the city. We hope W. L. Cukerski will be retained as superintendent of parks, and Jeau Gobel as sexton of Valley City and Oak Hill cemeteries.

Recent visitors: Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., of Philadelphia; Knopp Bros., of St. Johns, Mich., and S. Gentle, of the Twin City Floral Co., of Benton Harbor, Mich.

A SCIENTIFIC GRANDPA.

"See, grandpa, my flower!" she cried;
"I found it in the grasses!"
And with a kindly smile the sage Surveyed it through his glasses.

"Ah, yes," he said, "bivolucrate
And all the florets ligulate,
Corolla gamopetalous,
Compositae exogenous—
A pretty specimen it is,
Taraxacum dens-leonis!"

She took the blossoms back again,
His face her wistful eye on;
"I thought," she said, with quivering lip,
"It was a dandelion!"

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Decoration Day.

Try to induce societies and school authorities to give better recognition to the importance of Decoration Day. Many imagine plants and flowers are very expensive; you can do much to dispel this by suggesting simple forms of decoration, and by showing a little generosity in your dealings do much to preserve a beautiful custom. Anything in the shape of plant or flower can be used, and many very pretty arrangements can be made. Go to work at once and see if you cannot get all patriotic people to spend some thought and money on decorating the graves of those who have gone before. The national society by proper presentation could very easily get an appropriation from the government to annually decorate the graves in the National Cemetery. We would like to see some organized effort made to that end; it would result in great good, anyhow, and the time has come when every possible way of increasing the trade must be attended to.

Wedding Decorations.

This is the time of the year when flowers are cheap and plentiful and money can be made providing you have any business at all. Let's visit the New York market (the same can be done in most of the large cities) and see what can be bought, how it should be made up, and what we might ask for it. Suppose we are looking for materials for wedding decorations, we want big, showy flowers. Remember, decorations at this time of the year should be profuse. Here are lilies, both callas and Harrisiis; they can be bought for from 3 to 6 cents. Now, lilies are all right for the church, leave them out of the house; six or twelve lilies, six sprays of any green, a yard of white ribbon (gauze or silk) makes a most effective end-pew bunch. Five hundred Harrisiis will make a great show in any large building.

Roses—well, you can name your own price. Some days you can get what are known as No. 1 and No. 2 at $5.00 per thousand; other days they are double that, but even at the latter figure they are dirt cheap, and see what you can do with one thousand roses. Three dozen roses make a bouquet large enough for any woman to carry. You can pick out the best Brides and Maids for the bouquet and use the remainder for decorative work. You can charge all the way from $50.00 to $100.00 for the work you can do with one thousand roses and a little green and ribbons. A well-made bride's or bridesmaid's bouquet of roses can be sold at from $5.00 to $10.00. The most effective bouquet you can make is the loose cluster bunch tied with long streamers; they are on the right and left arm (we mean that in the case of bridesmaids walking two abreast the bunches are carried on the outside arm). Be sure every thorn is taken off.

All manner of blossoms are plentiful. You can get a wagonload for a few dollars. Of course apple blossoms are the most popular of all for May decorations, and every bride will readily accept their use, but while they can be made a leading feature it is good to have a variety. The "red bud" is very beautiful, so are the double flowering almond, crab and peach. Then there are the dogwoods, deutzias, spireas, lilac, hawthorn, and an endless variety. You may have them on your own place. We do not advocate the destruction of fruit orchards for wedding decorations, but there are numberless old fruit trees of inferior varieties that could not be used for better purposes. We would not use too much lilac, because many people imagine it is valuelessly plentiful. Purple flowers have no place at a wedding, anyhow, and the more the variety in the matter of spring blossoms the greater the value from a monetary and appreciative standpoint.

You can make a very respectable wedding decoration these days for $100.00, a better one, of course, for more. Outdoor grown flowers should be gathered in the early morning and kept in a cool place till required. Lily of the valley can be had for from $1.50 to $3.00 per 100. You can make a fine bouquet with from 200 to 350 valley and two smilax. We use the foliage very short and often put small valley in between the large. With ribbons and all you can afford to sell a bouquet of valley for $10.00 to $20.00. Some like sweet peas; you can buy enough of white or pink peas, swainsona or Marguerites for $1.00 or so to make a $3.00 or $5.00 bouquet.

It is bad policy to offer flowers singly or by the bunch at regular prices and have some customers want you to make them up into bouquets at the same price. It is always better to say you can make a nice bouquet at a running scale of prices, making due allowance for time, ability and trimming. It may sound as if there is lots of money in the flower business; there may be for some as regards cut flowers, but it requires ability to make them up into designs, and that deserves to be well paid for. Choicer and higher priced bouquets can be made of some combinations, such as valley and cluster of white orchids; gardenias or such flowers; cattleyas can be got at 25 to 35 cents, and are the finest flowers on the market—it requires two to three dozen to make a good bouquet, and you can ask from $15.00 to $25.00 for it, just according to trimmings and the customer.

It is merely a waste of time, money and energy to bother with small flowers in large decorations. You need large flowers to make a big show. You will find that hydrangeas are fine and cheap and can be used in many ways. We forgot to say that moss roses, both white and pink, can be had at 75 cents a bunch of twelve, and a few of them set off a bouquet to advantage, particularly in the case of white lilac or lily of the valley.

Funeral Work.

In the matter of funeral work the market abounds with splendid material, and often the cheapest and most despised is capable of producing the prettiest designs. Take, for instance, pansies; you can buy them for about $1.00 per 1,000. Now, one thousand purple pansies are enough to make a very handsome 30-inch wreath; that, with a large bow of white or purple ribbon, you can charge anywhere up to $15.00 for. Of course, each pansy must be put on a No. 36 wire, and that takes a long time. You can use them for other designs, and we know that this simple flower would be used in greater quantity were they suggested and made up properly. White and lavender sweet peas make a very pretty wreath, but there should be some distingnishing form of arranging the colors. You can use one for an inside and outside fringe, the other for center, or make half the wreath one color; sometimes a cluster where the bow is tied goes fine; taffeta ribbon with medium high bow is best with such flowers.

Sweet peas need to be fairly solidly arranged to be most effective, and you can generally get a good price for a wreath of them. The most generally sought flower, of course, is the white rose, and short-stemmed ones are just as good as the best for made-up work. There is plenty of rose foliage to be had, and where one has time to get it and many wreaths to make it is both economical and more artistic to use it. It requires from 150 to 250 roses to make a wreath to sell at from $8.00 to $15.00, according to grade of trade. It isn't a mere question of how many flowers you use in any particular work; it's rather a matter of how you can arrange them.

For young persons or anniversaries, colored flowers, particularly pink, are suitable, but for the general run of trade where artistic effect and the right thing is sought you will find that white flowers are best. Carnations make up finely and can be bought at from $5.00 to $10.00 per 1,000; 500 white carnations are enough to make a grand wreath or flat bunch. Use small-leaved ivy tips for embellishments, or asparagus. Designs of mixed flowers can be made up for almost any price, but except in the case of poor people much discretion should be used in order to have those who are willing to pay a good price retain that, alas! fast decreasing quality. Many prominent florists keep up high prices because their customers imagine they get the cream of the market and do not begrudge to pay for select stock, but you'll find even this class, at this time of the year especially, look for cheap flowers for general purposes. But again to funeral work.

We notice some very fine double white petunias that go finely in set design work. Growers who do a local trade should grow a batch of this useful flower. Then there are all the deutzias and outdoor flowers that can be used up, if not in filling in or outlining designs, at least they are good for base work. You know standing designs need a well-filled base to make them show their best. Callas, and lots of them, are being used in set work. In the case of a wreath of callas they should be arranged to face alike from both sides, and tie the bow or cluster of ivy sprays where they meet at the bottom. A wreath of callas with three blooms across the center, one a little higher than the sides, looks good. It is difficult to arrange large, stiff flowers, but with the aid of some light sprays of green they can be made to look graceful, and, as in everything, some people want or demand a change.

Casket covers are once in a great while asked for, and you can make the finest out of dark and white pansies—center dark, and deep fringe of white around the bottom. You might require from 5,000 to 10,000 blooms, and they need to be wired in order to properly arrange them and keep them in good condition. From $35.00 to $50.00 can be asked for such a design. No cumbersome frame is necessary, just fine wire netting or purple Porto Rican matting that will hang gracefully. The galax leaf trade has done an immense amount of harm to the funeral flower trade, because they are cheaper, and many florists push them in preference to flowers. You can make a $10.00 or $15.00 wreath with 1,000 galax leaves, which cost only 75 cents, and where you have plenty of trade you can always have a wreath ready for immediate delivery. Of course, it's a florist's particular aim to make all the money he can, but the future of the funeral flower trade sometimes deserves consideration.

Notes.

At this time of the year when the average person gets out of bed before breakfast it is not out of place to have a few fresh flowers on the breakfast table; in fact, providing different flowers are used, a vase of them on the dining table at all meals will produce pleasant thoughts, and they are often a cure for a bad appetite. In this class we find an abundance of bulbous flowers, carnations, roses, in fact all sorts, which can at least be offered at double what they cost you. We forgot to mention that Azalea Mollis can be lifted and made to shine in large decorations. Ivera.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Chrysanthemums.

The middle of June or even a little later is a good time to plant your main crop of chrysanthemums, and consequently about now is the time to put in the largest batch of cuttings. I am, of course, speaking purely of good commercial flowers. For specimen flowers a strong plant in a 3-inch pot would perhaps be the thing for this date. If you plant any on the benches in 4 or 5 inches of soil and pinch them during the summer a few times for the purpose of making bushy little plants to be lifted about September 1 for pots, then they can be propagated now, and if planted out by June 20 will be in plenty of time. I would rather have a healthy young plant full of growth, even if planted late, than a stunted plant. Yet I would like to say that it is remarkable how well a stunted, hide-bound, wiry chrysanthemum will grow and produce a good flower, but don't let them get into that state when you can help it.

Some few years ago we used to have some difficulty in rooting "mums" during May and June, and we used to put up a hotbed and a good deal of other fuss, simply because we did not know how to root them in the greenhouse. They want shade continually and without any let-up on all bright days, and a copious watering twice a day if the weather is warm. If these conditions are faithfully carried out they will root every one in 17 or 18 days. If your shade is not of a permanent kind and can be removed as soon as they are rooted, so much the better, for chrysanthemums want not a minute of shade after they have roots. Under shade they will quickly grow thin and weak and lanky, and that is worse than being stunted in the sunlight.

Hanging Baskets.

I notice just now we are filling once again our annual crop of hanging baskets. It is a style of ornamental gardening that is gradually growing more and more obsolete, yet there are always some people who want them. If well looked after and watered they can be really somewhat of an ornament, but too often they are sadly neglected and the bunch of moss which lines the basket swinging round in the summer zephyr is about all that is left to admire. The wire basket lined with green moss and then filled with soil is beyond question better than any earthenware or wooden basket, and is, I believe, much cheaper. In these hanging baskets the great features are the drooping plants or vines. It is of little consequence what plants are in the center, or whether they are flowering or not, for no one sees above the rim of the basket, but they do see the droopers that hang down a foot or two.

Never mind how common these vines are if they only make a good green showing. I find that we are using for this purpose the money vine (lysimachia), glechoma (the variegated), senecio (called here foolishly German ivy), lophospermum, nasturtiums, and for smaller plants to give some color, the lobelias, ivy geranium. I forgot one important plant, the vinca, green and variegated, although not thriving in the starved condition that usually pervades the hanging basket it never goes back and is always as good as when you put it there. Once more, if the vines grow your basket will be satisfactory and will please. You can put almost any old thing in the center. We generally use a geranium for the center, with coleus, achyranthes or a variegated geranium around that.

Orchids.

Your cypripediums (one of the most useful orchids) will soon be growing, and you should not delay in giving them a surfacing of fresh sphagnum moss. When the moss is green and growing it is nearly in the right condition. C. insigne is by long odds the most useful of the genus, and when adding the fresh moss to the surface don't be afraid to mix a good deal of bone meal with the moss. They don't want a watering as you water a geranium, but they want the surface continually moist, and when making their growths can be syringed twice a day. There is no place that suits this orchid so well as "out of doors," not with the pots standing on soil or sod, but stood on a plank or inverted pot and not in the full sun. On the north side of a building or the shade of lattice work will do.

Cœlogyne also does much better in the open air than it does under glass. Of course you will not put out these orchids till after the first of June or till all danger of frost is past. Cattleya Trianæ, the most useful of this grand genus, will soon be starting its growth. Clean peat or moss should be given to the surface of the pots or baskets, and if there is any sign of scale it should be thoroughly washed off. Now is the time to do it.

It takes twelve months to kill an orchid, and yet so few understand their wants. They have periods of rest, and if you can master that you have largely advanced on the road to orchid culture. After they have flowered they take a short period of rest when they want little water. Then after a few weeks they begin to grow, the terrestrial kinds, such as cypripedium and cœlogyne, making merely new crowns, not very observable, and aerial genera making pseudo-bulbs or growths which are very visible. While making this new growth they naturally want moisture because they are in active growth. After the new growth is matured they again want a rest, that is, less moisture, and many will endure a much lower temperature. The dendrobium, for instance, a most magnificent genus, while making its bulbs (which had better be called canes) wants a tropical climate, both as regards heat and moisture, and after the growth is mature will do well in a house where the temperature is not over 50 degrees at night.

Keep Ahead of Your Work.

As I am supposed to write strictly seasonable hints, there is no greater or more valuable hint just now than to keep well ahead of your work. Western New York, and perhaps many other districts, was visited last Friday and Saturday with 4 degrees below the freezing point, and several thousand carnations that had been planted out a few days before look like straw. The carnation is almost a hardy plant, but taken from ever so cool a greenhouse and suddenly subjected to 4 degrees of frost is a jar such as Mr. Erne of Buffalo received from Mr. Gans of Baltimore last night on the classic shores of Niagara River in the small time of 1:49, but that makes no difference. Be up with your work, and if a customer wants a bed of geraniums or cannas or dahlias in a hurry, plant them out by the 25th of the month. Don't sing the same old song that "We are liable to have a frost about Decoration Day, and it is not safe to plant out till the first of June." If you do you will be so overwhelmed the first week of June that you will wish you had been a resident of Martinique. Get out everything just as soon as it is safe. Geraniums can be planted here by the 20th of this month, and so can all the other bedding plants, except, perhaps, the coleus, and that is going out of fashion.

PRIMULAS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a house of primulas at the establishment of Messrs. Sutton & Sons, kindly sent the FLORISTS' REVIEW by that firm.

House of Primulas at Sutton & Sons', Reading, England.

A few lines on what came under my notice during a visit in March to the establishment of Sutton & Sons, says a correspondent of the London Gardeners' Chronicle, may have an interest for many readers of these pages.

With double-flowered varieties of primulas great progress has been made, which renders the plants of this section more easy of cultivation as compared with the older method pursued with the ordinary double-flowering primula. No fewer than six distinct varieties are now in commerce. Added to this, a double-flowered form of The Duchess has been obtained which cannot fail to become popular, possessing as it does the color of that variety.

Much progress, too, has been made with the carnation flaked strain, in which formerly there was so much more white than purple; but now the flaking is much more decided. The flowers of this strain are especially telling by artificial light. The white-flowering forms with dark leaf-stems are also found more effective on the plants than those varieties having green leaves and stems. The deeply fringed flowers come in compact trusses on short stems, and are freely produced. The improved double scarlet is now as rich in color as Crimson King, which is one of the brightest of primulas.

Among single-flowered forms there were many handsome types observed, but the one which struck me most was Pearl, a variety that still holds its own. Twenty-one years have elapsed since Sutton introduced this variety, and it is still a very popular variety. The plant is of robust growth, and the flowers come in large trusses, making it a very effective plant.

Royal White is another favorite; Snowdrift maintains its place for the purity of the white flowers, even the latest exhibit no tinge of any other color, and it is quite the earliest to flower where early-flowering bright colored primulas are valued; the variety Reading Scarlet is indispensable. Very fine are the individual blooms of Reading Blue and Cambridge Blue, which have but few leaves, and the style of growth is very effective and the plants very dwarf, and of remarkable freedom in flowering. Rosy Queen, a fern-leaved variety, is desirable, the habit good. The Duchess is still as fine as when introduced in 1900, and is perhaps the showiest primula, the rosy-carmine center being so telling a feature.

The giant single-flowered forms, in a variety of colors, are a distinct gain; the magnificent flower-trusses and flowers, some of the latter 3 inches in diameter, render this type very valuable in decorative work. Giant Pink, Giant Crimson, and Royal White are desirable forms, the first being especially effective.

Star primulas have a future before them, seeing what a great variety of color has been obtained, and how useful they are for cutting. No fewer than seven distinct colors are offered. White Queen is especially free; Mont Blanc, with dark fern-leaves, has become a very popular variety. A primula having flowers white, splashed with purple flakes, is attractive; pink and salmon colors are pleasing. Giant White produces flowers fully 1½ inches in diameter, remarkable for great substance in the segments.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

Rose growers, like carnation growers, are planting much earlier than in former years. The benefits derived from early planting are many. The young stock gets the advantage of the best growing season and has more time to form a thrifty bush before taking a first cut. Where a system of record keeping is strictly enforced, the cut from houses planted in May will show a vast superiority, both in quality and quantity, over those planted in July. Young stock in pots is also liable to suffer in hot weather, even with the best of care.

Repairing of benches takes up considerable time which can be ill spared at this season. After being repaired they should be thoroughly washed by playing the hose on them with sufficient force to remove all old soil from joints and crevices, and then given a painting of hot lime wash; this helps to preserve the wood and also destroys insects and their eggs. The sash bars should also be cleaned of all scum and dirt which has accumulated during the winter. The old soil should also be removed from under the benches and everything made tidy and clean.

The bottom of the bench should then be covered with straw or litter to keep the soil from running till it gets settled, and the soil spread evenly over the bench, which should be filled flush with the sideboards, keeping the rougher parts of the sod near the bottom. Then mark the distances the lines are to be apart along the sideboards. Brides, Bridesmaids and Meteors require at least one square foot of space; many growers give even one and one-quarter feet. Beauties require one and one-half feet. Planting in diagonal lines, or what is termed staggering, makes it easier to cultivate, syringe, stake, etc., than if planted in straight lines across the bench.

To hasten the young stock along a sprinkling of bone meal should be spread on the bench; 20 pounds to a bench 100x 4½ feet is quite plenty at this time. There is no necessity for stirring it into the soil, as sufficient will lodge around the ball while planting, and the after stirring of the surface and watering will carry the rest deep enough for the young roots to reach. The ball should be disturbed as little as possible and planted just deep enough to cover it. Any ball showing dryness should be dipped in a pail of water before being planted, as it is difficult to thoroughly water it after it is planted. Water each plant slowly around the ball, taking care not to wet the rest of the soil. Continue this individual watering for the first ten or fifteen days, syringing the plants twice a day during bright weather, the afternoon syringing to be done early enough to have the foliage dry by sundown.

RIBES.

CARNATION NOTES.

There are a great many growers who do not think of the soil for filling their benches until it is nearly time to fill them, and instead of looking around for good, rich loam they are obliged to take whatever comes handiest. There is no time to prepare it properly, and how can a good crop be raised on it? Other growers who grow both carnations and roses put up all their soil in the spring, because roses like a rather soddy soil, and the carnations have to do the best they can on the same sort. To put up a separate pile of soil for carnations is too much trouble for them. This is one of the many reasons why a better grade of blooms is grown on the place where carnations are made a specialty than on places where a variety of plants is grown.

Carnations do not like a rough, lumpy or soddy soil, but rather a well-pulverized, close-lying soil is to their liking. The same soil that you use for roses is good for carnations, except that it should lie long enough to rot the sods thoroughly. Sod that is piled up in the fall will be in good condition to use for carnations by the following summer or fall.

The best way we have ever found is to plow up in the fall what you expect to pile up, and let it lie exposed to the weather over winter, and then stack it up as early in the spring as you can. The exposure during the winter will kill many worms and weeds which you do not care to take into the house, and it will mellow up your soil wonderfully. If you did this last fall you should lose no time now in getting it piled up, so that all the vegetable matter will rot and so the manure can become well incorporated with the soil.

Perhaps you are one of those who do not think of the soil until planting time, and if you are, just let me give you fair warning that your crop next season will not be as good as your neighbor's who has his soil stacked up and in course of preparation. Take an hour or two to hunt up some good sod, and if your help is too busy to put it up get some teams and put them to work. Cut the sod with about four inches of soil to it, so that it will rot the grass quicker, and mix in only well-rotted manure. Cow manure is preferable, but if it is not to be had you can use well-rotted stable manure. Make the proportion as about five of soil to one of manure, and turn the pile over every four weeks so as to thoroughly mix it. Each time you turn it add about a 4-inch pot full of slacked lime to each wheelbarrow of soil. Do not add bone meal or other fertilizers until it is in the house on the bench.

Break up all the lumps as you turn it over, and never handle it when in a wet condition. You can still get very fair soil by August if you get at it at once and keep at it, but you can just as well do this work at a time when you are not so busy as you are sure to be just now if you just think ahead far enough.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

If it is proposed to plant early in June as soon as the bedding stock is got out, which is the run of the average florist's establishment, it is high time that the propagation of the young stock, if not already in operation, should be attended to without delay. Of course, cuttings can be rooted for a long while yet, but for early and mid-season varieties May is late enough to propagate if one is looking for a good flower with sufficient length of stem.

In rooting cuttings at this season see that they are well supplied with water, and frequently syringed to keep them from wilting, and just as soon as the young roots are beginning to spread from the base of the cutting, which they will in from two weeks on according to variety, pot up your young plant and let it make its new roots into the soil direct. This is, I know, well understood, and will probably sound like superfluous advice to some readers, but there is always the beginner who often fails to grasp the importance of doing things at the right time, and how often do we see in places whose owners know better, or at least ought to, the cuttings left in the sand until they make long, straggling roots and a thin, spindly top.

If stock has already been propagated, and a house is vacant, planting can be done at any time from now on; in fact, if the best flowers are desired, I would recommend planting as soon as possible. Early planted stock produces flowers of much better substance and finish than later plants will produce. Plants put out on the benches this month can, of course, be pinched as soon as they get hold of the new soil, and as many shoots taken up as are desired, though I would not recommend leaving over three shoots on any one plant.

All young stock should be outside somewhere now, preferably in a cold frame, within easy reach of the hose. I am no advocate of outdoor culture all the summer, but I have always found young plants to be greatly benefited by a few weeks outside before being planted in the benches. It induces a stocky growth, clean and short jointed, and the cool, moist night air is just what the mum delights in. Later on, with the intense heat of July and August, outdoor culture is quite another story, and any one who can possibly make room should keep their plants inside during the summer months.

The rust, which is such a terrible scourge to European growers, makes no headway here where plants are grown inside, although it will often appear on plants outside in July if a few days of moist, warm, showery weather happen along.

BRIAN BORU.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Cut flowers of all kinds have made their annual swamp of the market, bringing prices away down low with very little business of any kind doing. Funeral work is what we are looking for at present, but with the splendid weather we are now enjoying very few seem disposed to kick the bucket. We florists are the kickers; we generally kick when business is poor, but we hope to shy at the bucket unless there's something in it.

The supply of roses and carnations that are coming in is very heavy, and many fine lots can be seen that go for a song, in fact nobody wants them. Sweet peas are at their best and immense quantities are being disposed of by the retailers; they are a cheap and pretty flower and very popular on the coast.

F. Lyons, Sutter street, has bought out his partner, V. Antonie, and will conduct the store under his own name.

Mr. Jack Gilmour, Elmhurst, has made a success of growing Liberty roses. Some that he sends to market have stems three feet and over, and buds of splendid color. Jack will make a large planting of Liberty this year.

J. Figone will open a store on Fourth street near Market in a few weeks.

Mr. Thomas Stevenson, Powell street, intends to visit London on June 10. This will be his first visit since he left the old sod to the scenes of his childhood. Eastern florists, look out for him if he comes your way. He is a pleasant chap and very entertaining.

J. Barry, recently from New York, has leased the Potett establishment and restocked it with carnations, chrysanthemums, Bridesmaids and Beauties.

J. W. Shannahan, Powell street, has been on the sick list for four weeks with appendicitis. Although still suffering from the malady, Mr. Shannahan was at his post this week. It is to be hoped he will soon recover entirely.

V. Matria, Powell street, is thinking of visiting Boston in the near future for the purpose of opening a store in that city.

Ed Gill will erect one house, 30x100, for carnations.

The State Floral Society, chiefly composed of lady amateurs, and the Pacific Coast Horticultural Society, composed of practical gardeners and growers and those connected with the trade, have agreed to disagree in the matter of holding a spring flower show, for the reason that the lady members of the S. F. S. wanted to run things their own way. It is the writer's belief that the best has happened. It is well that it was nipped in the bud. The combination should never have been made in the first place if floriculture was intended to be advanced in San Francisco. At the present time San Francisco is away behind eastern cities when it comes to a floral exhibition, while her place ought to be at the head, considering her climate and talent to be had.

The premium list lately issued by the joint societies is the same old premium list we have had for the last fifteen years or more; we haven't got out of the old rut yet. Just think of it! In class A No. 1, for professional growers, $2.50 is offered for the best seedling carnation (never exhibited before). What a splendid inducement for the raisers of seedlings! Then again $25.00 is offered for the best and largest collection of carnations. There is only one man in San Francisco, or, in fact, on the Pacific coast, that has the best and largest collection of carnations, and he wins that prize each year with little or no competition. We may not care for competition in business, but when it comes to the show room we want all the competition we can get. The more the better.

The premium list runs in the same strain from beginning to end, and I consider it very unfair and not interesting. When exhibitors are not interested in general and only a few attend an exhibition, knowing they have a cinch, the affair becomes a failure like many we have had on the Pacific coast in years gone by. In making up a premium list the effort should be made to bring out the multitude. For instance, if $10 or $25 was offered for the best twelve blooms of Flora Hill, or any other variety of standard carnation, see how many growers could enter in that class with very little expense, but of much interest to themselves and patrons of the show room. Give every one a chance to win a prize if they can, large and small growers alike, amateur and professional. J. N.

A FOLIAGE ARRANGEMENT.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a foliage funeral arrangement by the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago. They find that such arrangements meet with the approval of many people and that the call for them is increasing.

The arrangement shown contains cycas, kentia and asparagus, and is tied with a sash of lavender ribbon. The selling price was $5.00. They make up other similar foliage arrangements for $10.00, $15.00 and even up to $20.00 and $25.00. In some cases a few sprays of choice flowers are added, preferably sprays of orchids or similar graceful flowers. But the most popular ones seem to be those consisting entirely of foliage.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held in the wholesale rooms of President Sheridan on Monday evening. Nearly thirty members were present. The executive committee reported the appointment of Mr. Bunyard as manager of the fall flower show, which the club confirmed. Mr. O'Mara reported an encouraging interview with the members of the Society of American Arts and Sculpture, which gives promise of active co-operation and assures the club of a great success by the addition of this novel and popular adjunct to the flower exhibition.

The outing committee reported all arrangements completed for the club's excursion July 7. An exhibit of new varieties of pansies by Mr. Beaulieu, of Long Island, and a new variety of ivy from the Caucasian Mountains exhibited by J. H. Troy, of the Rosary Co., both received certificates of merit. A letter from Edwin Lonsdale was read, announcing the prizes offered by the American Rose Co. for the best exhibits of the Ivory rose at the fall show.

The possibility of securing the original club rooms was announced and the use of the president's rooms until the committee's decision later was assured. Convention matters were discussed and a transportation committee appointed with a view to arranging with the Boston and Philadelphia florists for a grand union of forces in the invasion of Asheville. Mr. Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, was present and entertained the club with reminiscences extending back thirty-five years, before the American Beauty was born, and when Papa Zeller was a "boy," illustrating the wonderful growth of the cut flower commission business, and closing with good, practical, fatherly advice as to how to make a flower show a success. Alex. Wallace, of the Exchange, was reported convalescent after an attack of appendicitis.

The Market.

The market is just about what may naturally be expected at this season. The florist who adds gardening to his repertoire now has his innings and is as busy as the proverbial bee. The man who sells cut flowers only finds the sledding poor. All the weddings have been postponed until June. Balls and parties are like angels' visits. There's "nothin' doin.'" A few straggling exceptions to the rule materialize, but its "quiet" almost everywhere. Retailers keep attractive though simple windows. Hard to find a neglected front these days in New York City. Business or no business, the man or woman who does not keep the window attractive has no business in the business.

Spring flowers are unlimited. Pansies and sweet peas in every window. Iris and gladiolus are plentiful. Roses are generally of poor quality and sell at very low rates. Carnations are abundant and of excellent quality, even "fancies" maintain their values of colder days. The Liberty rose is at its best.

Items.

Father Smith, of Washington, was in the city last week as one of the Congressional committee accompanying the remains of the Hon. Amos J. Cummings to New York. Mr. Cummings was a great friend of the horticulturists and helped in securing the national charter for the S. A. F. O. H., and was a botanist of considerable repute. Many handsome floral tributes attested his popularity, a standing anchor from the Society of American Florists being one of the most beautiful.

The Horticultural Society of New York has been incorporated, the certificate being filed with the Secretary of State at Albany May 9.

A large contingent will go from New York and vicinity to the Nurserymen's Convention in Milwaukee, June 12 to 14. Quite a few will join the party going by the popular Delaware & Lackawanna, one of the most charming routes from New York to the west.

The exhibition this week (Wednesday and Thursday) at the conservatories in Bronx Park promises to be very interesting and will be largely attended. Many novelties will be exhibited, interesting lectures given and a multitude of prizes awarded.

The new market is a success, the old one is a shadow. Over 200 growers already crowd the great room above the Cut Flower Co., and this early it is realized that the great complaint will be lack of room. The fact is the whole building would be none too large for the general requirements of the wholesale florist business of this city.

Reed & Keller now occupy the whole of the building on West Twenty-fifth street, a sufficient evidence of the wonderful growth of this enterprising house.

The new store of Alex. Guttman's at 49 Broad street is now open and most attractively furnished. Business was good from the start.

The regular spring cleaning, repairing and beautifying of the wholesale stores is now in progress.

Bowling.

The Bowling Club's aggregate memory is defective. The afternoon of the Florists' Club meeting is always devoted to the "game of games," but only three of the regulars were on hand.

Captain Lang will call that little bluff of Brother Beneke's at Asheville, or is ready to bowl any one on New York alleys who is a member of any reputable florists' bowling club in the country.

The three best games rolled Monday afternoon follow:

Capt. Lang	160	166	180
Burns	157	181	181
Siebrecht	141	142	175

AUSTIN.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market continues quiet. The cool weather improved the quality and cut down the quantity of stock coming from greenhouses and decidedly interfered with outdoor flowers. Prices are unchanged, except for an occasional weakness somewhere on the list. A good deal of stuff is consumed at pretty fair prices, and there seems good reason to believe that we shall have at least three weeks of brisk business before the season closes. Beauties are fine and plentiful; carnations are plentiful; sweet peas from inside are gradually falling off; lilacs are nearly over.

Plants.

The bedding out trade received a check when the mercury unexpectedly dropped close to the freezing point on the very morning (May 10) which the authorities have agreed to be absolutely safe from frost hereabout. Most of the plants set out are at purchaser's risk, the wary florists having filled very few of the beds and boxes intrusted to their care.

Bulbs.

A small army of salesmen from Holland has left our shores, homeward bound. They report business satisfactory, about the same as last year in the east, with an increase in the west. The quantity of bulbs consumed in this country is steadily growing, but the production, especially in the south, diverts part of this increase of business from foreign to domestic channels. This is especially true of single daffodils, which are being extensively grown near Petersburg, Va. The American buyers are taking more high grade hyacinths, although the fancy grades still go to Germany. The price of nearly all scarlet tulips has been advanced, owing to the English demand for this color for bedding. Chicago is ordering more Murillo tulips than in the past. La Reine seems to hold its popularity everywhere. The local wholesalers have noticed a great falling off in the demand for bulbous stock, both for in and out of town orders, indicating partly a falling off in popular taste for these flowers, but chiefly that every one with greenhouse facilities is growing them.

Notes.

Randolph & McClements, of Pittsburg, who received twenty-five hundred long-stemmed American Beauty roses in one order from this city last week, have written the shipper, Samuel S. Pennock, a handsome letter on the quality of the stock sent.

The local demand last week was quickened by the offerings sent to the members of the Savoy Dramatic Company, an amateur organization, which gave two performances at the Broad Street Theater. Beauties and lilacs were the principal flowers used.

H. H. Battles made effective bridesmaids' bouquets with pink blooms of Hydrangea Otaksa for a fashionable wedding.

Hermann Schoenfeld has been very busy with funeral orders.

Mrs. Plender seems to grow all her own roses.

Caspar and George L. Pennock are cutting some fine Golden Gates.

Prof. Stewardson Brown delivered an address on the effect of environment on plants before the Germantown Horticultural Society on Monday evening. E. C. Jellett and George Redles collected and described varieties of wild flowers.

Thursday (the day this issue is mailed) is Bowlers' Day at Essington. In the afternoon a great baseball game, florists versus all comers, to give the vanquished clubs a chance, and in the evening a shad dinner, with the presentation of the league's bowling trophy to Captain Moss and his victorious team. PHIL.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Conditions are probably a shade better than last week, except as regards lilac and other outdoor flowers. The dealers are literally buried in lilac and seem unable to move enough to make any impression on the immense receipts. It is doubtful if the express charges are realized on much of it.

The cooler weather has somewhat reduced the cut of roses and the quality probably averages a shade better, but the great bulk of the stock is poor, much of it showing the effect of thrips, as well as being soft. Prices are practically the same as last week. In the lower grade stuff the counting is done very liberally, and the hundreds are of generous size to a good customer.

Carnations are about as plentiful as last week and about as cheap. At the same time prices are undoubtedly better than they were at this time last year.

Some very good longiflorum lilies are now coming in. They are large and have excellent substance.

Various Items.

At the regular meeting of the Florists' Club, held Wednesday evening, "Garden Plants and Planting" was the subject for discussion, and cash gratuities were offered for meritorious exhibits.

A committee from the Wholesalers' Association has conferred with Superintendent Cooley of the public schools regarding the order forbidding the use of flowers at commencement exercises. It would seem that the best way to accomplish anything is for the retail florists to get customers who use flowers to send protests to the Board of Education against the rule noted. If every retailer would induce one or more of his customers to send a letter of protest to the board it would have a decided effect. Now is the time to act.

A. C. Brown, the florist of Springfield, Ill., who is a fine golf player, will play in the open tournament for all amateur golf players in the United States that opened at Wheaton this Wednesday.

John Bertermann, of Indianapolis, passed through the city Tuesday on his way to California, to bring home his brother, W. G. Bertermann, who has been confined to his bed for the past three weeks.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting some fine blooms of Lilium longiflorum giganteum, which they find to be the finest summer lily, though it cannot be forced as early as Easter. The blooms are large, have much substance, are carried more erect than those of the type and the stem is suffused with brown. This sort has been entirely free from disease.

Mr. F. D. Rennison, superintendent of the greenhouses of the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines, Ia., was a visitor Monday. He was on his way east and will be away from home about three weeks.

At Lincoln Park the tulips are past their best, and some of the hyacinth beds have been replanted with stocks. In the hardy garden colonies of poet's narcissus and jonquils adjoining the shrubs have been very effective. The native phlox is in bloom, the trilliums are showing white under the shrubs and the greens and browns of the rapidly growing herbaceous plants make a beautiful study in color tones. The lilac buds are beginning to show color, but owing to the cool weather the leaves on the trees are not yet fully developed, though a few warm days would complete their unfolding.

The Market.

If flowers grew on trees like apples, and all the growers climbed up and shook each limb, they could hardly be more plentiful here than most seasonable kinds were last week. Violets are not showering so voluminously, but I hear of no unsupplied demands for them. Bulb goods can hardly be classed as seasonable. Enormous sales especially of roses and carnations are being made at all kinds of prices, from fairly good to ridiculously small, and I presume it is to be feared "the end is not yet!"

Best Beauties still bring $4.00 per dozen, Liberties limit at $1.50, very few pink and white ones bringing over $1.00. Carrots are coming very good and quite a few Kaiserins are around looking up a later market for the main crop of them. No matter how good they may be, they will not readily sell so long as the Bride holds fairly good. Have not seen a decent Jacque for a week or so. Was not their season a short one this year?

With the change of Summer street from a leading wholesale street to a supposed-to-be leading retail street a couple of years ago, on account of the opening of the Terminal Station, there was quite a movement among the florists for stores in that section. High rents froze out most aspirants, and while there is no testimony against the prosperity of the few florists who did start either stores or street stands, it develops that those who started larger stores in other lines of work have not done the business expected. Probably lucky no one tried floristry on a very heavy scale.

Asparagus Comorensis.

If in Boston in the evening take a look at the new mammoth electrical sign on the top of a store on that street. It can just shout any short sentence in any language.

A Wellesley florist ordered $500 worth of lumber. A clerk misplaced the letter and the goods were not ready when expected. This shows how frisky "Capers" sometimes become "Stearn" questions.

L. E. Small has just one white carnation plant with marked peculiarity in method of bloom. The calyx cannot be said to "split," but it gracefully opens wide and lets out a blossom like a chrysanthemum, and about as large. The effect is not bad at all.

There is always "somethin' doin'" out at Peirce's. Just now they are watching the development of 50,000 fine spirea plants with an average of ten spikes per plant. I am told that more than one order of 20,000 each is already booked for the end of the month. They cut it with a sickle and give generous count per bunch.

Mr. Mitchell, of Waterville, Me., has been Bostoning for a week or so just to keep up with the times. Like all state-o'-Maine men he is a fine fellow and a rising florist of the Pine Tree State's University city.

It is hard to make some folks see any good in a street florist, especially his competitor under a roof. However, a new use has been discovered for them. They are a class of biped that does not plan to be run over, any way, so when a thief tried to do so with a tray of diamonds he had snatched the other day Mr. Fakir stopped him. Good!

But those yellow callas with spotted leaves that J. J. McFarlane is bringing in are a curious novelty.

Did you note Mr. Walsh's new enameled leather boots? J. S. MANTER.

ILION, N. Y.—Hakes & Son are building a new house, 15x100.

ASPARAGUS COMORENSIS.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of this asparagus furnished us by Mr. C. Eisele, Philadelphia, who finds this species even more useful than the well-known A. plumosus, as it grows much faster and makes a string in far less time. As will be seen by the picture, the habit closely resembles that of plumosus.

Mr. Eisele says: "It was introduced into European gardens about twelve years ago from the Samoan Islands, but I obtained the seed from Southern California. It looks very much like plumosus, but is even more graceful than that variety, and grows more vigorously, making very long strings in a shorter time."

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The club meeting opened with only seven members present, the growers being all busy with spring planting. President Meinhardt and Vice-President Ellis were again absent, and again ex-President Fillmore occupied the chair, and conducted the meeting in his usual pleasant style. All committees are expected to make a full report at the June meeting. It was also decided to dispose of the World's Fair matter for good, and so if any one feels interested in this matter let him attend this meeting or forever hold his peace. Mr. Fred L. Plant, of the Plant Seed Co., made application for membership, which will be acted upon at the next meeting.

Messrs. Koenig and Tesson were each to have read an essay, but as neither of these gentlemen were present they will be asked by the trustees to have their papers ready for the June meeting.

The trustees were instructed to make arrangements for the annual picnic to take place some time in July. The next meeting of the club will be held at Belleville in the Commercial Club rooms and will be held a week later (the third Thursday in the month), which will be June 19, at 2 o'clock. This kind invitation was extended us through Dr. A. S. Halstedt. At this meeting we will also hold our annual smoker and a few songs and stories will make it worth your while to make the trip. Every florist is welcome to join us at this meeting. The meeting was voted a week later, as by that time all the work will be done and all will find time to have a good time. After a few discussions on questions taken from the box the meeting adjourned.

The Market.

The market was in worse condition than ever last week, and each day the wholesalers were stumped to know what they would do with the next day's shipments, as every box was full from the day before. Never was stock disposed of any cheaper than last week. It is said that 10,000 roses, assorted colors, were sold at $10. Just think of it! $1 per 1,000. Carnations, too, were slaughtered, the fakirs selling the original bunches at 15 cents or two for 25 cents. What is going to become of our business if this state of affairs keeps up? The legitimate florist buys his supplies early in the morning and pays from $1 to $1.50 per 100 for carnations, and from $3 to $6 for roses. Perhaps two or three hundred of each and a few sweet peas will be about all he will need just now. After this the street fakir or store fakir (one is as bad as the other) comes along and buys his stock—1,000 carnations at $5 and 1,000 roses at the same price. The same stock is given to each buyer. I think it would be a good thing if the growers would only send in their first-grade when stock is so plentiful and get a good price for it, and dump the other stock themselves. By doing this the cheap stuff would be kept off the streets and it would soon put the market in a healthy condition.

It is of no use to quote prices this week. I have said too much already and I hope to speak more favorably of the market in my next report. No doubt the grower, when he gets his report from his consignor, will take a little of my advice in regard to shipping only the best of his stock to this market and he will find reports will be better after that.

The retailers are complaining that last week was a dull one, and even funeral work, which was quite plentiful, was lost sight of. The sudden hot weather put an end to all social events and the theaters have all closed, and from now on things in this line will be over; the only thing we have to fall back on is the school closings next month, as Decoration Day in St. Louis is of no benefit to the florists, and not much is expected of the school closings, as the invitations will still read, "No flowers, please," and so the only thing that is really looked for from now on is funeral work.

Park Planting.

The planting season will open this week at the city parks. Everything throughout the parks is looking fine, especially the shrubs and trees. The planting will be under the supervision of Supt. Pape. The severe wind and hail storm of Sunday week ago did quite a lot of damage to trees in the different parks. The hail was not large enough to do much damage to glass, although a few of the South St. Louis florists lost a little glass, but not worth while reporting, they say.

School Gardening.

Two hundred and fifty-nine children have entered the Sunday Post-Dispatch contest for three prizes offered to children under 16 years of age who shall make the prettiest gardens in their home yards—$20 in gold for the first prize, $10 in gold for the second and $5 in gold for the third. The children of florists are not allowed to compete for the prizes. Entries closed last Saturday. The inspection committee will be chosen from members of the Engleman Botanical Club, which is working in co-operation with the Post-Dispatch. Each little gardener will be given a certificate signed by its president, Dr. William Trelease, and by Mayor Rolla Wells. Inspections will be made at intervals throughout the season, when the prizes will be awarded.

Visitors.

Martin Reukauf, representing the supply house of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia; J. A. Smith, of the Walter Mott Seed & Bulb Co., Jamestown, N. Y.

Mr. Henry Emundt and Dr. A. S. Halstedt came over from Belleville last week to buy supplies and to call on friends.

Notes.

Max Herzog, out at Gratiot, is making preparations to build a new rose house this summer. Max is now busy planting American Beauties. With these he has been very successful the past season, averaging seven flowers to a plant. His self-feeding smoke consumer will soon be ready for exhibition.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, is head and heels in work with building, and is keeping a close watch on the new houses so that his old enemy, Mr. Thrips, doesn't get in before him.

Ellison & Tesson will soon have to vacate their down-town store, as a large hotel is to be built on the site. They are now looking around for a new place near the old stand.

John W. Kunz, who for the past two years has been with F. M. Ellis, wholesale florist, is no longer connected with that firm.

Geo. Waldbart, the Grand avenue florist, is contemplating a trip to the old country this summer.

Now that the World's Fair has been postponed till 1904 St. Louis will not want the S. A. F. convention next year, as was proposed at Buffalo last summer, and Milwaukee should have it by all means; that is, if Brother Pollworth is still hankering for it.

Bowling.

The bowling club started its May series of twelve games Monday night with the handicap slightly changed. Sturtz, with 15 handicap, was high man, followed by Ellison, scratch man; Miller, who is coming to the front as a first-class bowler, was third. Seven bowlers made the following scores:

	H.	1.	2.	3.	Total.
John Sturtz	15	232	183	202	617
A. Y. Ellison	..	194	211	199	604

CINCINNATI.

Market Conditions.

There has been no improvement in the condition of the market during the past week. The usual May glut of carnations is on and only the better grades can be moved at anything like fair prices. It is always noticeable that when lilac and that class of flowers are in the market the sale of carnations is seriously interfered with.

Bulbous stock is about done. Even forced valley is out of the market at present; there is plenty of outdoor stock which sells at 50 cents to $1.50 per 100. There will be plenty of forced valley in this market all through June and it will be first-class stock.

Sweet peas are in good demand and more of them could be handled to advantage. White ones are scarce, and, of course, in greatest demand; lavender sells well; they bring 50 cents to 75 cents per 100.

Carnations were in oversupply and $2 was top-notch price for the very best, and from that down to 50 cents per 100 and less in large lots. The intensely hot weather affected the keeping quality somewhat, and color suffered also. We are having cooler weather now and all stock shows its good influence. A shortage in the supply was the first result and prices rose to $2.50 and $3 for the best stock, with other grades at $1 to $1.50.

Roses sold out well every day and at fairly good prices. White is in greatest demand, with pink a close second. In red there is a first-class supply of real good stock, especially of Liberty, which demonstrates its superiority over Meteor by never coming bull-headed and by bringing better prices even for short stems. Good Brides and Maids bring 4 to 6 cents; seconds, 2 to 4 cents; Liberty, 2 cents for short up to 6 cents for best grades; Meteors, 1 to 4 cents.

Longiflorum lilies are still in oversupply and sell slowly. Iris is coming in and sells for 1 to 3 cents per spike. Smilax is scarce, but there is a fair lot of asparagus to be had.

Various Items.

Mr. Herms, of the Herms Floral Co., Portsmouth, O., was a caller Saturday. Three years ago this firm lost the entire stock of their greenhouses through gas escaping from the city mains. In the suit against the gas company for $5,000 damages several Cincinnati florists will be called to give testimony as to the value of plants growing in greenhouses. The trial is set for May 15 and some interesting and valuable information as to valuations will undoubtedly be brought forth.

Benson Bros. have discontinued their stand at Jofee's on Fourth street.

John Critchell, who died in Florida last week, was buried in Chicago last Sunday. B. P. Critchell, his brother, left here Saturday evening to attend the funeral, returning Monday forenoon.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held Saturday and the following gentlemen were nominated for directors: George S. Bartlett, J. W. Rodgers, R. Witterstaetter, Wm. Murphy, Ben George, W. K. Partridge, Geo. Murphy, Wm. Schuman, F. Ball and E. G. Gillette. Five directors are to be chosen from the above at the next regular meeting of the society.

The invitation of Chas. Pommert, of Amelia, O., for an outdoor meeting of the society to be held at his place in July was accepted, the date to be decided on later. An invitation from Mr. Wm. Murphy to visit him at his place in August was also accepted. Many other points of interest were discussed, among them the monthly shows given by the society during the winter months. C. J. Ohmer was accepted as a member.

Miss Hattie A. Keister, representing Miss A. Martin, Huntington, W. Va., was a recent visitor. C. J. Ohmer.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Trade Notes.

Never before has this market been in a more deplorable condition than at present. The weather has been warm and bright, with very little rain or clouds, and everything in the flower line is plentiful. Up to a few days ago there was a good demand and almost everything good was used up, but now the bedding season has opened nobody seems to think of cut flowers, except for funerals.

Good roses are not too plentiful, but there are lots of the poorer grades. Carnations can be seen by the thousand at every greenhouse, and to top the thing off there are about twenty fakirs come down from Chicago, and these are having carnations shipped from Chicago in thousand lots. One department store a few days ago sold carnations at 5 cents per dozen. Last year the State Florists' Association saw the mayor about stopping the fakirs from doing business, and they were driven off the streets, but at the last meeting nothing was said about it and they are likely to remain with us for the season.

We need rain badly again; it would take at least twenty-four hours of steady rain to put the ground in proper shape again. Young trees and, in fact, everything planted this spring is suffering for want of water. Outside flowers are coming along rapidly and a full crop may be expected for Decoration Day if we get some rain. Pæonies are almost ready to burst open and the crop will be heavy.

Several firms have already begun to erect new houses, while others are waiting until the spring rush is over. Young & Sonnenschmidt report one house nearly up, while Baur & Smith have not begun to dig the postholes. The latter have planted their carnations in beds where they are to remain, and will build over them. John Hartje adds a carnation house. Henry Rieman adds a rose house, a boiler and a 60-foot smokestack. The Flower & Plant Co. has added two houses this winter and spring. Ed Corneli is moving back to his old stand at Illinois and Pratt streets.

The event of this week will be the dedication of the Soldiers' and Sailors' monument, and no doubt many flowers will be called for in entertaining the many visitors attending the dedication.

Mr. John Bertermann stated at the last florist meeting that there would likely be no fall show unless the society takes it into its own hands again. Last year prominent merchants of the city took it in hand and held a successful show, but this year interest seems lagging and nothing definite can be gotten out of them.

At the next meeting the society's by-laws are to be changed, and every member who can possibly do so should be present. A. B.

BALTIMORE.

In the past week we have had a variety of weather, beginning with a day or two of hot southerly winds which dried things up like a sirocco, then a sudden and great drop in temperature, with frosts in many localities on Saturday, and the mercury this morning (May 12) at 42 degrees. Tender stuff in low places was touched and some will have to be replanted. There has been no rain for a week, and the surface soil is getting dry.

Through the early part of last week trade was very dull, but it brisked up toward the end, and Saturday was a particularly good day, this being due to funeral orders mainly and to the requirements of some affairs at one of the large schools.

Stuff is plentiful, and the price of roses has come down as the demand lessens. Carnations keep up in bulk and the demand is good, though some are running wild, the failure to disbud being evident. Valley has practically disappeared. Red and tree pæonias are coming in, and sweet peas are in demand with the supply about equal. Good American Beauties are still in evidence, and from the mountains Mr. Weber is sending down some fine Harrisii lilies.

There are a good many entertainments and functions which call for flowers, and this, with funereal necessities, keeps a fair quantity of business distributed. Soon the college and school commencements will be the order of the day, then the June weddings, and very quickly midsummer dullness!

It is a matter of regret to report that in this community within the past two or three months several florists places, not of the largest extent, but some of them established for many years, have succumbed to ill-fortune and disappeared from the scene of active operations.

HENRY A. DREER, 714 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DENVER, COLO.

The Denver Florist Club have just finished their spring flower show, May 1, 2, 3 and 4, which proved a decided success, though the weather was bad, especially on Sunday, the 4th, when we had a shower of hail, but as usual it was the only bad weather we have had either previous to or after the show. The show was held in the pavilion at City Park, being free to the public, concerts being given every afternoon and evening. In addition to the large space in the pavilion they had a tent, 50x200 feet, on the east side for the flower beds, carpet bedding, etc., and in the pavilion decorative plants and cut flowers, table decorations and mantels were staged. The display in cut flowers was good, especially in carnations, in which the competition was very close.

This spring show was an innovation here in Denver, and some of the members felt dubious as to its being a success, on account of its being such a busy time with the florist, but every one feels well satisfied, as after paying all premiums and all expenses the committee turned a nice sum into the treasury of the club, and that with no charge of admission. The club placed the entire management of the show in the hands of A. J. Graham, our former president, who by his hard work and persistent devotion to the success of the show, succeeded in making it prove so satisfactory. And it has already started the members to talk of a mum show this fall.

The Davies Bros. Floral Co. have leased the Daniels & Fisher place in South Denver, thus giving them two greenhouse establishments, and Mr. E. W. Davies, who has been foreman at City Park greenhouses, has resigned his position so as to be able to take care of their large and increasing trade. F. T. Rushmore has been appointed by the park board to that position. Also Ed. Emerich has accepted a position at the City Park greenhouses.

All Colorado is suffering for want of water, there being but little snow stored up in the mountains for irrigating purposes.

In cut flowers not very much doing. More stock than there is call for, and it takes the usual standby of funeral work to help out. THORNE.

ST. PAUL.

Owing to the unfavorable, unseasonable weather trade has not been as active as it might otherwise have been. There has, however, been a good demand for cut blooms and good stock, especially in roses, has been none too plentiful. Prices have been well maintained, roses being held at $4 to $8 per 100 and carnations at $1 to $2 at wholesale. This town does not grow near enough for its home trade, and large consignments are shipped in daily from the east.

While the writer would not advise any one to enter business here it seems as though one or two carnation or violet growers would find a profitable trade here. From 3,000 to 5,000 carnation blooms and 1,000 to 3,000 roses are shipped in here weekly for about nine months in the year, to say nothing about Beauties, violets, smilax, etc., all of which combined swells the total to quite large proportions. The trouble has never been where to sell stock, but where to buy it.

A recent visitor, Mr. C. H. Fisk, of Chicago, marveled at the wonderful increase in trade here since his last visit ten years ago. The country trade in the northwest is assuming good proportions and growing rapidly, and those who do a shipping trade report a doubling and trebling of business every few years.

Our local orchid expert, Dr. R. Schiffman, was elected to the assembly on the Democratic ticket, leading all competitors by several hundred votes, and all this occurred while the popular orchidist was in Japan or on the seas, thus doubly emphasizing his popularity with his fellow townsmen. We expect to see him bring back a fine collection of his pet beauties from the Philippines and the far away Orient.

Christ Hansen, the enterprising Dale street florist, has been awarded a verdict of $2,000 against the gas company for damage to plants. A similar suit a year ago was settled out of court. The gas mains in front of Mr. Hansen's greenhouses burst, or at any rate leaked, when the ground was frozen several feet deep. The gas permeated the unfrozen soil, coming to the surface inside the houses and killing the plants.

L. L. May & Co. expect to break ground soon for the erection of three modern greenhouses, replacing some of their present plant, which is quite old. This firm has had a very fine business this spring in hardy nursery stock. Their farm at Lakeland is rapidly assuming the appearance of a full-fledged nursery, some seventy acres being planted this spring in addition to seventy-five planted before.

Fred Schafer, well known to the craft here, has gone to Montana to take charge of the private place of Mr. Wormser. His friends will all wish him success in his new position. X. Y. Z.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

A copy of the printed proceedings of the eleventh annual meeting of the American Carnation Society, held in Indianapolis, Feb. 19 and 20, 1902, has been received from Secretary Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa.

It is a very neatly printed book of 106 pages and contains all the essays read at the meeting, together with a stenographic report of the discussions and much other interesting matter, including a list of the carnations registered during the preceding year. The frontispiece is an excellent portrait of Past President Bertermann.

The report is one that should be in the possession of every one interested in commercial carnation culture. If you are not already a member of the society you may become one by sending your name and address and $2.00 to Secretary Albert M. TORONTO.

We have had an unusual amount of bright weather this spring and the season is about three weeks ahead of last year. The city parks and gardens are gay with spring flowers and foliage.

Trade in general has been good, very good, and I doubt if we will have sufficient bedding stuff to go round, as there has been and will be an unprecedented demand this spring. Pansies wintered well and there is an abundance of fine stock. They sold slowly at the opening of the season, but are going fast enough now.

Roses and carnations have been plentiful and the prices, I think, a little stiffer than last year, though not high by any means.

G. P. Plumb, who opened a retail store in the upper portion of Yonge street (one of our main thoroughfares), reported satisfactory business results. Mr. Plumb was recently at the head of the flower department of one of our big stores; he is also one of an old flower-growing family.

A very successful "at home" was held by the local Gardeners' and Florists' Club recently. C. W.

ROCKPORT, O.

May 10, as I was passing Gasser's Rockport greenhouses, I ran in to get out of the snowstorm (which was a lively one), and was well paid for it.

Mr. Kennedy showed me a large house of roses planted last fall for summer blooming, containing Kaiserin, Testout and others. Some of the Kaiserins are just coming into bloom and they are the finest I ever saw. The other kinds are later, but are in splendid condition.

They have the sides and bars up for two large houses, 300 feet long, to be planted to roses. Other houses will be built, also a new boiler-house with two 80-horse power boilers.

Mr. Schuman, formerly with Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, is in charge of the Essex Greenhouses, Mr. Jacobson going to Bridgeport, Conn. ACME.

FT. WAYNE, IND.—Miss Flick has removed from her old salesroom at 33 W. Berry street to the new building at 43 and 45 W. Berry street. The new store is splendidly arranged and equipped.

ORANGE, N. J

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held at their rooms in Orange on May 5, President Hayes presiding. Among the miscellaneous business transacted was the consideration of the fall exhibition, the committee reporting progress. They were authorized to address influential persons interested in floriculture, with a view of securing sufficient patronage to make it a marked social success.

The society was entertained by Joseph B. Davis, who has recently returned from a cruise of the Mediterranean and Egypt, and his remarks were illustrated by over one hundred photographs of the scenes he visited. The most noticeable feature in plant life in this region was the palm; with the exception of Constantinople and Palestine, the first possessing many fine cypress and the last the olive. But little fine cultivation of bed or border is observable, the labor of the native gardener being taken up by the irrigation so necessary in this climate. It was with difficulty that flowers for the table could be secured in Constantinople. At Madeira and Algiers magnificent calla lilies were seen growing wild in the borders of banana and sugarcane plantations.

The only thoroughly organized flower business was in Cairo, which has five florists' establishments, who each raise their own stuff, and roses, violets and carnations can be had during the social season, which is a short one—only from January to March. Naturally the prices are high; violets scarce at $2.00 per hundred. The roses raised and sold are Perle, Bride, Kaiserin, Gontier, Safrano, Paul Neyron and Malmaison, all grown in the open and sold at two shillings a dozen, the lowest price. Very different from the Riviera, where under the same climatic conditions long-stemmed roses sell for 4 cents each. J. B. Davis.

OMAHA.

I wish to write a few words of warning to the florists of the country to be on the lookout for a man who went by the name of Fred Smith here in Omaha. He is a florist, about 32 years old, German, says he has been in Brazil gathering orchids for three years; also has been employed in some prominent eastern places. He appears to be a pleasant man and a good worker, but proved to be a swindler. He works long enough on a place to get sufficient confidence to be allowed to collect money from customers. Then he pretends that they don't pay. Also borrows money from as many as he can and then leaves town. In that way he swindled about a dozen Omaha people. Lewis Henderson,
Secretary Nebraska Florists' Society.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Decoration Day.

Upon the florists of this country devolves the duty of preserving the original intent of Memorial Day, and in our humble opinion some organized effort should be made with that end in view. The decorating of the principal monument in each city on that day by the florists would result in a vast amount of good to the trade, for it would remind others of their duty.

Don't you think that you could induce some school or society to invest a small sum in connection with the greatest event in the history of their country? True, you may not make a dollar on the transaction, but you are sure to get some good from it indirectly. Better for you to do this than to loan out plants or give flowers for nothing to some wealthy hen party. In the case of a class, society, or school buying plants from you, you might arrange to have them planted for them; in many cases we notice plants in pots put around some monuments, only to be dried up and swept away in a day or two. Where there is no room to put plants out, better induce the party to adopt the wreath.

In the parade each Grand Army Post should at least carry a well made wreath, and we believe that every man could be induced to pay 25 or 50 cents for an individual wreath, providing it was made prettily, and in quantity. Small, pretty wreaths could be made for that price. For Christmas and Easter we make herculean efforts to capture trade; would it not pay to make up a set of Memorial Day wreaths? Not artificial stock, but well-made designs in natural material. We are of the opinion that if such were on exhibition in your window, and on your counter from now on, many could be sold.

Six sprays of leucothoe, green or bronze preferable, tied both sides of a ten-inch wire ring, a small silk flag tied in the center at the bottom, makes a pretty little wreath that will appeal to any Grand Army man, and it can be made and sold at a profit for a few cents. The same kind of design can be made of boxwood, mountain laurel, bay leaves, galax, cycas, ivy or any substantial green with only a few cents difference in the cost. The manner of making up the wreaths should be such as to add value to the material; they should be the same on both sides, made good and substantial and tidy, and have the national flag attached. We are under the impression that if florists would take a sample of these to the proper authorities almost every man parading in commemoration of the day would carry one of these wreaths to a comrade's grave.

Where a collective wreath is desired it can be made of lasting flowers such as roses, carnations, hydrangea, in fact anything that will last several hours parading, but there should be flowers, not tinfoil, on the reverse side, and the wreath should be any size from two to five feet in diameter. The only correct wreath of green to put on a soldiers' grave is a crescent wreath made full and round, with bay leaves; of course there are several others, which as things go are good. A wreath of small cycas leaves, the lightest of all wreaths (and weight is a very important matter where things have to be carried long distances) can be made on a frame work of fine wire netting. This is done by taking a crescent wreath frame and fixing the netting in the shape the wreath is when mossed; individual leaves of Laurus nobilis or leucothoe are then fastened on by wire hooks, twisted on the inside; the reverse side of the wreath can be greened with ferns, or Asparagus Sprengeri, or smilax; there is no moss or sticks used. This style of wreath could also be used for general carrying purposes.

Party emblems or designs are entirely out of place on Decoration Day. Often we see anchors, fire trumpets, swords, flags, post or state designs made of several colors in immortelles or cape flowers; these are carried admiringly in processions; but that does not make them appropriate nor justify their manufacture. Harmonious effects, of course, are always delightful, but the use of colors in almost any form are permissible for this event, in fact the more cheerful the colors the better. You are not providing for a funeral, you are beautifying memories, consequently boutonnieres of red, white and blue (corn flowers, red rose, white carnation, or any such), loose bunches of flowers or small wreaths of flowers are distinctly good; even the wearing of an ivy leaf shows some thought of the full meaning of the day, and when you consider the vast amount of material, such as rhododendron, Azalea Mollis and all manner of outdoor flowers growing in the gardens or nurseries of the land, there are immense opportunities lost in not creating pleasure and thoughtfulness in the minds of school children, grown up people and the veterans, that there is something beyond cemeteries to be proud of on that day.

A photograph of a decorated monument in the City of Mexico has been sent us and we are pleased to be able to show American florists this example of good taste. The only exception we take is that the inscription in front is covered too much. In your work it is always best to frame, not cover, that which tells the public why and to whom the honor is done.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Summer Blooming Roses.

Although somewhat late for a reminder—yet early enough as the weather has been—it will be found very useful and profitable to have some good beds of true summer blooming roses. By that I mean some teas that bloom freely out of doors in summer time and several of the hybrid teas. The hybrid perpetuals are really not much use to the florist, beautiful and grand as they are, for when they are in bloom roses are at the lowest notch in price and most everybody has them and their season is short. I don't know of any plants more difficult to procure in the spring than satisfactory young roses, say in 4-inch pots of such kinds as Carnots, Kaiserin, Cochet, La France, Etoile de Lyon, Sombreuil and others. You can buy them by the thousands from some of our large specialists, but they are small, microscopical sized plants and our customers want something stronger and larger. I suppose if they were as easily grown as geraniums there would be plenty of them, but they are not. There is more time and brains needed in the production, and you will get paid for that, and the man who has an unlimited quantity of these varieties in good, strong, young plants in the spring would find a demand from every quarter.

There may be more than one method in producing these bedding roses and, of course, quality being the same, the most expeditious is what we are after. Small plants, such as you can buy for $20 to $30 a thousand in May, and planted and lifted in November and put into a 4 or 4½-inch pot and wintered either in a well protected cold frame or a very cold house, and just allowed to come along with increase of heat of spring, will make ideal plants. This I am sure of. A good judge of such things said to me last summer, when he saw a bed of Cochet flowering profusely, which were strong cut back plants a year old, that he thought you got better results from plants propagated the previous fall or during winter. I don't think he was right. The one-year-old plants that have been kept about dormant during winter will be entirely satisfactory.

Another plan if you have the stock is to propagate in September or October in the ordinary propagating bed. No bottom heat is necessary, and as soon as rooted pot them up and with good care and some heat get them well rooted in the pots. During December and January they can be given a low temperature and this will be a rest for them. Then in February shift into 4-inch and give heat and care, and by middle of May you will have a young plant that will soon begin to flower when planted out. The most seasonable question is what are you going to do now. If you retail young roses to your customers I would get small plants of the varieties named and several others could be added and plant out. And if you only want cut flowers for your trade you should get the strongest plants you can of three varieties just for the summer blooms which are continuous from June to hard frost, and those three are: Mme. Cochet, both the pink and white; Kaiserin Augusta and President Carnot.

Those that have a house of Kaiserin for summer bloom will turn up their noses at the outside stuff, but comparatively few have these, and the great majority of growers plant their tea roses on shallow benches and our best tea roses are of poor quality after the middle of June, or thrown out to plant new stock, and it is a great deal more difficult to get a clean, fresh-looking rose in July than it is in January. You seldom see Perle grown nowadays. This beautiful rose I have planted out in a field at the end of May and cut profusely all summer, but not, of course, with any great stem. Our greatest commercial tea rose, Catherine Mermet and its sports, Bride and Bridesmaid, are useless out of doors in our northern states. Where the alligator regales himself on pickaninny and the cowboy roams in Northern Texas they may flourish.

Just a word about the soil for these roses in the open ground. From some experience in planting tea roses for summer bloom I have never noticed any great difference in quite a wide range of soil, almost pure, light sandy loam to a heavy clay loam, providing it was not worn out by years of cropping; by all odds the best results were from a meadow or stubble that had grown only grass or cereals for years and never roses. No amount of manure or any kind of fertilizer will restore to the soil what is lacking, if it has been a long cultivated garden, and our worn-out gardens are too often the cause of our customers having such miserable success in their attempts to have a rose bed.

Bedding Plants.

By the time these lines are read by my friends (if they are not too busy) our bedding business will have begun in earnest. I think I said recently, "Put off till to-morrow nothing that can be done to-day," and that applies most earnestly to the filling of your orders. If you tell your customers that it's not safe to plant out any tender plants till the first or June you will be simply overwhelmed when that day arrives, and for the next three weeks the grumbling and the kicking you will get from alleged nice people will turn your hair gray. Unfortunately, perhaps, but really for the better, there are more people in the world who take pleasure in finding a cause for a kick or grumble than those who habitually say, "That's all right, I know you will get around to me as soon as you can." The latter class seem to be the salt of the earth and make us feel that existence is not a failure, but the crusty, exacting pieces of protoplasm are the mediums that keep us awake and progressive.

It may seem strange to those in more favored latitudes to talk about not putting cannas out before June 1, but such it is with us. Plants that are really hurt by a night temperature of 35 degrees, and perhaps with a cold wind, should not go out before the first week of June, but geraniums, salvias, verbenas and all plants that you grow in your houses (or have grown) in a cool temperature during winter should go without delay, and every flower bed you get planted before Memorial Day will be a great relief to you. Perhaps the largest amount of plants sold in our big cities go to people who know nothing of the grower and will not hold him responsible for their success or failure, but many of us plant year after year for the same good customer, and we should not do it unless our efforts were successful.

I am reluctant to repeat what I have so often said that in my humble belief there is only one way to plant either an oak, elm, Norway spruce or geranium, and that is to put the plant into the ground to its proper depth, and well firming the soil round the roots or soil, as the case may be, but not filling up the excavation. Then a watering in the depression, and when that has soaked away cover or fill in with an inch of dry soil. In a bed of 100 geraniums or cannas this would take possibly fifteen minutes' more time than jamming them into the soil, smoothing it all over and then watering the whole bed on the surface, but, oh, what a difference to the welfare of the plants. You cannot give sufficient water on the surface to thoroughly water to the roots of the plants, particularly if the bed is rounded up in umbrella form, as too many of the people think a flower bed should be.

A Cottage Garden.

A Cottage Garden.

A good many asters are already planted, and many more to plant. Be sure you get them near the hose or means of irrigation. A dry spell in July and August is fatal to them and the ground cannot be too deep or too rich.

Cyclamen.

A plant that suffers from now on for a month with the general florist more than almost any other, and it is one of our winter stand-bys, is the beautiful cyclamen. We make up our minds in the winter that next spring we won't neglect them, but the rush of the planting time comes, and all hands, and more hands if we had them, are driven, and these young plants, perhaps now in 2-inch pots and some in 3-inch, are overlooked. Now, please put them in some light house where there is plenty of air. Syringe them lightly every bright morning and fumigate at least twice a week. They don't like a scorching sun through unshaded glass, neither do they want a permanent shade, such as whitewashed glass affords, but a shade of some sort on bright days from 10 to 4 o'clock is the ideal, and if you cannot give this correct form of shading then half shade on the glass. By that I mean if your glass is 12 inches broad, run the whitewash or whatever material you use down the glass, say, 6 or 7 inches broad, leaving a strip of clear glass on each side. This is a great improvement over covering the whole surface, for those plants that do not want or thrive in too heavy a shade. For instance, it's about the thing for our houses just now that are filled with a variety of summer bedding plants.

Most gardeners know, but perhaps some do not realize, that to leave the glass clear and apply shading inside, such as paper or cheese-cloth, is shading the plants true enough, but you are not keeping the temperature down; your houses will be just as hot as ever. To keep your temperature down your shade must be over your glass.

Don't forget to stake your sweet peas when they are three inches out of the ground, and I will say a sweet good-bye.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

A COTTAGE GARDEN.

Our photographer has a garden and has favored us with the photographs from which the accompanying engravings were made. He doesn't belong to any particular school and has worked on rather original lines, but the effect is not unpleasing. The mixture of tiger lilies, golden glow rudbeckia and perennial phloxes bordered by coleus is decidedly an original conception and the hall mark of the amateur is seen in the tuberose blooming among the phloxes and tiger lilies. But the effect is good as well as interesting.

Evidently nothing came amiss or was considered out of place when this garden was planted. The association of geraniums with perennials, and annuals put in helter skelter, may seem incongruous, but we confess we like it, though it might not be approved by many. While we wouldn't be apt to plant a garden that way yet we find much in it to commend and such a garden does excellent missionary work among the people.

ROSE NOTES.

Liberty.

After two years' trial by many experts, it is still a question if Liberty can be grown successfully with any certainty. Some few weeks ago the trade journals published the opinions of many of these experts, and hardly any two of them agreed on the method of culture. It is certainly a fine rose and well worthy of a good many trials before being discarded, but it will be wisdom for the smaller growers to experiment on a small scale till success is attained.

During the past two seasons, we have experimented with it in all our rose houses, planting part of a bench in each house in order to find out if possible the conditions under which it would succeed. Those planted with Meteors and run at a night temperature of 68 to 70 degrees did well up till November when dark weather set in when they suffered severely from black spot, which continued to infest them up till Easter; they are now looking well and producing some fine blooms, but in productiveness they are far behind Meteor.

Planted with Kaiserins and run at a night temperature of 62 degrees, have done fairly well during the whole season. Grown along with Brides and Bridesmaids, they, in spite of all we could do, insisted on having a rest during the winter months; they are now growing nicely and producing a fair cut.

Our most satisfactory results have been with plants which were never allowed to approach being pot-bound, and which when in the bench were continually encouraged to active root action by frequent cultivation using a sprinkling of bone meal once a month and watering liberally during the summer months. Liberty requires a very small excuse for taking a rest.

RIBES.

TOMATOES.

"Inquisitive" asks why I recently recommended a correspondent to trim Sutton's Best of All tomato to one or two shoots, and if I would recommend such treatment for other varieties; and asks further: Is the object to get larger fruit?

This is, of course, growing tomatoes outside that is referred to. I would certainly recommend anyone to grow his tomatoes with only one or two stems and either trained on a trellis or tied to a stout stake. The advantages are obvious if one considers for a moment. Plants that are left to take care of themselves fall all over the ground, and in showery weather much of the fruit splits or gets burnt by the sun, while lying on the hot soil. The fruit is also dirty, and if the season happens to be a very wet one, the plant will make a forest of shoots, and produce very little fruit, or what it does produce will be very late in the season.

I am well aware that most market growers let their tomatoes grow just as they please once the plants are set out, but it always seemed to me that the saving in labor by so doing is more than offset by the lateness of the crop and the poorer quality. This system may perhaps work all right on a dry bank with a southern exposure. In such a position the plants would set fruit no matter what the weather, and the shade afforded by the foliage would keep the soil moist for the roots, but speaking generally I would never grow my tomatoes that way.

The finest crops of tomatoes I ever saw growing outside were handled as follows: The plants were tied up and kept to one shoot until it was about five feet high. Then when six or seven trusses of fruit were set another shoot was brought up from the bottom of the plant which gave a later supply of fruit, and the crop can only be described as enormous.

The advantages, briefly, are early set of blossom, consequently early ripening of the fruit (and since "Inquisitive" lives in Vermont this should be of paramount importance, as I imagine their season is none too long), cleaner fruit, more easily gathered and certainly in a wet season if not in a dry one, more fruit to gather.

I have seen plants swept off by disease when left lying on the damp soil, while plants tied up in the same garden were practically clean and furnished a fine crop of fruit. C. H. T.

A WILD GARDEN, AND WHAT IT MEANS.

[Read before the Germantown Horticultural Society, April 14, 1902, by Edwin C. Jellett, Germantown, Pa.]

Wild flowers, we are aware, do not appeal with the same intensity to all, and it follows that a wild garden may prove of little interest to many who love flowers, but thinking the subject a worthy one, I have selected it for consideration this evening.

A wild garden is not, as many assume, a garden wild, but it is a collection of plants native to a district, planted, arranged and taken care of just as other garden plants are cared for. And a wild garden wild is even more sloven and deplorable than an ordinary garden wild. I remember an account Prof. Meehan told me some years ago of a visit he made to Mr. Wm. Robinson's place near London. Mr. Robinson was the author of a celebrated book, called the "Wild Garden," and the possessor of what was considered an exceedingly fine wild flower garden. After lunch Prof. Meehan was invited to inspect this garden, and his humorous account of it I shall not soon forget. He told me he did not doubt the plants were there, and that they were all that was claimed for them, but he could not see the flowers for weeds. It is needless to say that this is not the kind of garden we have in mind.

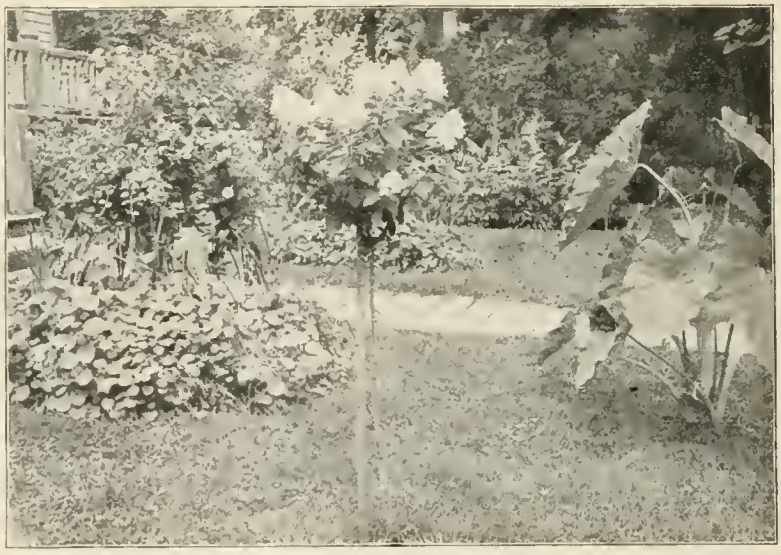
In the selection of plants for the wild garden it is necessary to use discretion. One needs not to be told that a heavy clayey soil will not do for ferns, though a few ferns may survive in a soil of this nature. Neither will aquatic plants flourish in peat. Both in the selection and in the placing of plants, endeavors should be made to as closely as possible imitate nature, and if the planting be properly done there need be no fear of the result. For ferns it will be best to select a partially shaded position, or at least a place which is shielded from the direct rays of the midday sun. Many ferns require a good loose loam. Other ferns require a peaty soil, with a good proportion of sand. All ferns require good drainage. In fact, all plants, no matter where placed, require thorough drainage.

The proper time to transplant native plants varies. The latitude is wide, and success is sure to the observing and the industrious. As with trees and shrubs, many prefer to plant in the fall, while others maintain the superiority of spring planting, so it is largely a matter of opinion, or condition, when hardy plants may be moved. For myself, I prefer the fall for hard wooded plants, and the spring for plants of tender structure.

Hard wooded plants, if moved after the leaves have dropped, remain dormant during the winter and will push without loss in the spring. Ferns if moved in the late fall, if not carefully planted, may dry out, or for other causes may show no life in the spring. I have never had special difficulty in growing any of our native plants. If the laurel or wild honeysuckle be moved during a resting period, and the root fiber be carefully preserved, and when transplanted the soil be pressed firmly about the roots and afterward properly watered, there will be no halt in the growth, and at the proper season the plants will start as though they were in their original position. The trailing arbutus treated in the same way will respond the same as the laurel and the wild azalea. In a wild garden near Chew street and Washington Lane I had both laurel and arbutus growing, which flourished for several years, and may yet do so, for I left them there when I left the place.



A Cottage Garden.

If hard wooded plants are moved after they have started, the chances are that they will fail. If on lifting a plant it is found that the root buds as well as the leaf buds have started, strip the plant of all leaves and buds, and give the roots a chance. Some plants start first at the roots; other plants leaf first. Usually plants bud first, and when the leaves have developed then the root buds start to push. Ferns usually develop in this way. This kept in mind will save many a plant, and much time and labor which might be lost.

Soil, it should be remembered, is little more than a material substance which a plant uses; that light, air, heat, moisture and subservient chemical properties which a plant has the power of appropriating and assimilating are always necessary and ofttimes independent of the soil. Keeping this in mind, we may understand more readily the value of drainage for the admission of needed properties and the necessity of a porous soil which will serve the peculiar needs of a plant. It may then be seen that all wild plants will not do equally well together, and that for the greatest measure of success both skill and judgment are required.

We shall now present a few plants as an introduction to the wild garden. One of our earliest native plants, and one of the most eagerly sought for, is the trailing arbutus. It usually will be found in flower about the 15th of March, though its period of bloom depends entirely upon the season. I have found it in flower before the date given, but sometimes it is not in bloom until April. The buds being formed the autumn previous, open at the first appearance of fair weather. The pale pink, refreshing flower may then be found peeping from a mossy bank, or, inconspicuous as they often are, in hiding near surface, filling the air with fragrance.

It is a prevalent belief that it is next to impossible to transplant arbutus, and numerous cases of failure I have knowledge of. The failure, I think, is due to a lack of attention, or is a fault in the observance of conditions. The arbutus will be found growing on high banks where moisture is abundant and where the drainage is perfect. In transplanting, the greatest difficulty is to find a place where the roots may be kept moderately dry. The great secret in transplanting anything is to press the soil about the roots as firmly as possible, and afterward to thoroughly soak with water. After this the plant should be watered only when necessary. It is, of course, useless to attempt to move arbutus after it has started to grow, but by observing the simple rules given I several times transplanted arbutus and in each instance was entirely successful. Once, however, I destroyed a plant which had been growing eight months, by giving it too much water.

From the middle of March until April the hepatica may be expected, though in favorable seasons it may be found earlier. The delicate, beautiful, lilac-tinted flowers first appear, and are followed later by a most interesting growth of leaves. For either flowers or foliage the plant is most worthy of cultivation. The hepatica is one of the easiest plants to move, and when transplanted will thrive from the start.

The common practice of planting bulbs in the autumn is good, but it may be questioned, for the reason that it almost wholly ignores our native bulbs, many of which are worthy of cultivation. It has been urged that the flowers of our native bulbs are too transitory in their character. While without question this is true, yet the same may be said of the crocus, tulip, and of other bulbs commonly planted. Again it has been urged that the flowers of our native bulbs are too inconspicuous, which is also, so far as the criticism goes, true. It, however, is not proposed to plant one kind of plants to the exclusion of the other. Recognizing and acknowledging the merits of the one, the purpose is to point the merits of the other.

Perhaps the earliest of our bulbous plants, as well as one of the handsomest, is the blood-root of our woods. The whole plant—flower, leaf and tuber—is intensely interesting, and is well worth a place in every wild garden. By a series of observations made several years ago I found the average duration of the flower to be three days, and as the flowers do not appear simultaneously, the period of bloom continues for an extended period. After the bloom has passed the leaves of the plant are an ornament to any garden. The blood-root will do well in any light soil, and with any attention at all it will grow. The plant usually blooms about April 10.

About the first of April the first flowers of the spring-beauty may be found. It usually grows in rich ground, in woods near streams. The bulb will be found from two to three inches below the surface, and to obtain it without injury a trowel is required. Although the foliage of the plant is not especially desirable, the flowers are very beautiful, and no wild garden is complete without it.

The rue anemone usually blooms in company with the spring-beauty, and the windflower blooms a little later. Both of these are worthy plants, and will do well in a shaded place in the garden.

A Cottage Garden.

Early in April the quaker lady makes its appearance. It has many names, and the name depends entirely upon the district where it grows. Here it is sometimes called innocence, and again bluets. Elsewhere it is known as dwarf pink, and by numerous other names. The technical name is Houstonia cœrulea. I dislike technical names, but they are useful and necessary to a proper identification of a plant. The quaker lady is known to every one, I think, and there are few who have not gathered in grassy fields and meadows its delicate, refreshing, variable sky-blue flowers.

One of the brightest of our early spring flowers is the columbine. It will generally be found in the crevices in rocks in woods, though it thrives as well in other positions. The finest native columbines I know grow on a shelving bank of loose soil near Valley Forge. Compared with this colony of plants, the rock columbines, which are obliged to struggle for existence, appear poor and ill-treated.

The lungwort is one of the choicest of our native plants. At one time it was common, but now it is rare near Germantown. It grows freely when transplanted.

The rattlesnake plantain may be found from the first of April until late in the fall. It is one of the finest of our native foliage plants, and few, if any, of our cultivated plants surpass it in the beauty of its markings. Compared with plants previously mentioned, it is rare, but when once observed it may be found again, and when transplanted it may be kept in good condition without difficulty. This is not properly a spring plant, for it blooms in June. The flower, however, is not its attractive feature, and only orchid lovers would think of securing it for the bloom.

The saxifragaceæ start early, and are usually in bloom about April 10. About Germantown there are two varieties, early saxifrage and meadow saxifrage, and both are desirable on account of their sweet spring odors. The common saxifrage usually grows in the crevices of rocks; swamp saxifrage, as the name implies, usually grows in meadows. The first is desirable in certain positions on account of its low, dwarfish growth, and the latter in other positions because of its erect and sturdy form. Either plant will do well, and will look well in a rockery.

The specimens of the liliaceæ growing near Germantown are many, and all that I recall are worthy a place in the garden. Among the number which appear early are the Solomon's seal and false Solomon's seal. They will be found in flower from May 10 to May 25. Both grow in woods, and in several respects resemble each other. They flourish in a rich, loose soil, and when transplanted to a like soil grow freely and do well. The flowers of both plants are interesting and beautiful, and when they have passed the berries of the false Solomon's seal are wonderful in their variation.

Other desirable and easily obtainable native plants are wake-robin, Dutchman's breeches, wild ginger, bluebell, dogtooth violet, spring iris, panax, pyrola, pipsissiwa and several varieties of violets and buttercups. There are many other desirable flowering plants, but at this time we shall pass them.

Almost without exception our common wood ferns do well in a garden, and if given any attention at all will generously respond. The beauty of our maidenhair fern, royal flowering fern, cinnamon fern, Christmas fern, and of a number of other of our hardy ferns, cannot be surpassed and I doubt if they can be equaled by any of the aristocratic exotics we sometimes see in glass cases. The ferns I have named, if properly planted, are permanent, and from year to year gain in strength and beauty. All do well in a good, well-drained soil, and in a partially shaded place. There are other desirable varieties of ferns to select from, among them several rock ferns. The rock ferns are the hardest to manage, and should be left until experience has been gained from more adaptable sorts.

As the wild garden is the object before us for consideration and discussion, enough has been presented for the opening of the subject. The plants mentioned are but a few of the many about us, and those given are not calculated to impress all with a sense of their beauty. The individual fancy must ever be the guide, and individual judgment, director. In this, as in every other matter, the important thing is to have a definite object in mind, and to start well. A wild garden well begun will renew itself, and, if I mistake not, will become the most attractive part of the garden. When once planted such a garden is permanent, and daily increases in beauty, which, as the poet says, "is a joy forever," and joys enjoyed "will never pass into nothingness."

THE FUTURE.

The progress made in the growing of cut flowers under glass during the past quarter century has been truly remarkable, but it is evident there remains room for further advancement.

The frequent scarcity of really good flowers in summer time suggests that more attention should be paid to meeting and overcoming the adverse conditions of that period. That this will be finally accomplished none can doubt. The question is merely who will do it and how will it be done.

Just to set brains at work and possibly bring out some discussion we will mention a few points that have occurred to us. We are inclined to think that eventually the house for summer blooming roses and carnations will be kept closed. That scientific inquiry will place at our disposal a shading that will admit practically all of the light from the sun while excluding much of the solar heat. That the temperature will be further reduced when necessary by the use of the refrigerating machinery now in common use. And that the air in the house will be continually changed by the use of fans or similar devices. And this air will be drawn through filters that will effectually prevent the admission of fungous germs, or insects of any kind.

Would it pay? Yes, it would pay from the start the few who would make the start. And if success was attained in this it would not be long before all up-to-date growers would have all their houses so fitted. How much would it be worth in the winter cut to be able to give the roses and carnations a May or June growth all summer?

All this is possible with mechanical devices already available. It is merely a question of expense. And while the original outlay required would be considerable, the difference in the market price of strictly first class and third or fourth class stock surely warrants a considerable outlay.

As to summer shading, it is well known to science that common alum is "opaque to heat and transparent to light," while on the contrary iodyne is opaque to light while transparent to heat. As alum is cheap and can easily be applied to the glass in the shape of a wash (a professor of physics whom we consulted says it should be applied hot if possible), we think it may meet the requirements of the case.

As this is the season for shading, we trust that as many readers as possible will experiment with this shading and report results to us. It seems as though its greatest value just now would be in shading the pink carnations, thereby preserving their color without unduly withholding light.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Jos. H. Prior reports the weather as very uncertain and that the temperature was within two degrees of freezing the night of May 8. Firing is still necessary. Very little bedding has been done yet. The weather has been excellent for setting out hardy shrubs. There seems to be an unusual demand for Hydrangea paniculata; every one wants a few.

NEW YORK.

The exhibition of the New York Horticultural Society, held last Wednesday and Thursday at the New York Botanical Garden, was a very successful affair and attracted a large number from the city. The weather was ideal and the conservatories, lectures and exhibits proved most entertaining. These conservatories, when fully furnished and complete, will be the finest in the world. The contributions of palms and plants with which they are already filled have been sent from every part of the country, many of them from large private establishments in this vicinity.

Dr. N. L. Britton's lecture on "Features of the New Zealand Flora," with stereopticon views, was well attended and very interesting. On Thursday a lecture by one of the lady teachers, giving illustrations of every part of Bronx Park in winter and summer, with views of the inner furnishings of the conservatories, and many other features of interest proved the best drawing card of the week.

The council of the Horticultural Society announced completed arrangements for an international conference on plant breeding and hybridization in the fall, Sept. 30 and Oct. 1 and 2. This promises to be a great success. The active support of all the important national and state organizations has been promised and delegates appointed. Papers have been promised by Wm. Saunders, Ottawa, Ont.; E. J. Wickson, University of California; Byron D. Halsted, New Brunswick N. J.; David George, New York Botanical Garden; L. H. Bailey, Cornell University; J. C. Whitten, Columbia University; H. F. Roberts, Manhattan, Kas.; C. C. Hurst, England; F. W. Burbidge, Dublin, Ireland; W. W. Traey, Detroit, Mich.; W. A. Cannon, Columbia University; S. A. Beach, Geneva, N. Y.; E. S. Goff, University of Wisconsin; C. L. Allen, New York; S. W. Fletcher, Washington; W. Van Fleet, Little Silver, N. J.; M. de Vilmorin, Paris;; E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind.; C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; A. Wintzer, West Grove, Pa., and others.

The exhibits were numerous and creditable, most of the first prizes falling to H. Siebrecht & Son, whose entries were: Crotons, palms and foliage plants, foliage and flowering plants, orchids, ferns, begonias and flowering trees and shrubs. F. Weinberg of Woodside was first for Alpine and rockery plants, also succulent plants. W. H. Wood of Greenwich, Conn., won first prize for flowering shrubs with a collection of over sixty varieties. The Bedford Agassiz Association secured first premium for a collection of wild flowers. S. E. Close of Greenwich, the second. The exhibit of orchids by Lager & Hurrell of Summit, N. J., was almost totally destroyed through the carelessness of the express company.

There were six entries for the $50 prize offered for "the best horticultural novelty in plant, flower, fruit or vegetable." The fruit and vegetables were "not in it." The other entries were: Tritoma Crocata, by John Louis Childs, of Floral Park, N. Y.; a Caucasian mountain ivy from J. H. Troy of New Rochelle; a zygopetalum from H. A. Clinkaberry of Trenton N. J., who received a special prize for cut orchids; the Farquhar rose, from R. & J. Farquhar of Boston; the Nephrolepis "Anna Foster," from L. H. Foster of Dorchester Mass., and Nephrolepis Piersoni from the F. R. Pierson Co. of Tarrytown, N. Y. All the entries were of exceptional beauty and merit. The judges accorded the Pierson Co. the 50 simoleons for Nephrolepis Piersoni.

Sunday was commemorated by the Daughters of the American Revolution and the graves of all the revolutionary soldiers buried in Trinity were decorated with lilies, including that of Alexander Hamilton.

This has been a wonderful season for bay tree importations. Notwithstanding the immense stock brought over last year the end of the season found them all distributed and this year they seem to be more popular than ever. They are everywhere—in front of the retail stores, the large hotels, the theaters, etc.

Alex. McConnell reports a good trade in cut flowers and especially in landscape work. He has issued an excellent catalogue and has some large estates in charge. The largest of these is the Gould estate at Lakewood, where sunken gardens are being established, with marble surroundings, at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars.

Clark's Sons have moved their cut flower department into their new store at Seventy-fifth street and the Boulevard, where they have 6,000 feet of floor space and cellars correspondingly large. They propose to complete their establishment with every modern convenience. Their greenhouses, further up the Boulevard, they will retain another year.

Mr. Marshall Clark has just endured an operation for appendicitis, and at last accounts was recuperating, with good hopes of complete recovery.

Mr. Robert McClellan, with Wadley & Smythe, has also had a successful tussle with this disease, which seems to be a popular one among the florists.

Mr. Wadley is still convalescing at his home in New Rochelle. His recovery has been very slow, but ultimate recovery and the saving of both limbs is now assured.

A movement to make the opening hour of the new market 6 instead of 5 a. m. will be considered at the annual meeting of the Cut Flower Co. on Saturday.

The windows are gorgeous with dogwood, rhododendrons and every kind of spring flower, and business is as good as can be expected at this season.

The excursion to Milwaukee next month by the nurserymen from this vicinity promises to be a large one, and many, if not all, will go via the popular Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad.

Dennis Connor of Philadelphia was a visitor at the bowling alleys Monday evening. Mr. Connor has just completed arrangements with Lord & Burnham Co. whereby he assumes charge of their interests in and around Philadelphia, a very fine position for a worthy and popular man, whose friends are legion.

The Nephrolepis Fosterianna shown at the Botanical Gardens has been on exhibition in New York the remainder of the week and many of the prominent retailers have placed large orders for future delivery.

The Market.

The market conditions are fair for the end of May despite the very variable weather. We have had some pretty hot days and damp nights. The stuff coming into town holds up pretty well. There are some good flowers of all kinds and most of them bring fair prices. There is, of course, much poor stock, and this vexes the spirit of the seller. Beauties are still seen in grand form; indications point to there being a good supply for the June demand though hardly as many as during the past fortnight; specials preponderate; $2 to $3 per doz. is the price. Brides and Maids bring $4 to $6; the creamiest of the cream, $8. These prices will give an idea of the other teas and hybrid teas. Carnations range from $1 to $1.50 for the best ordinary; $2 to $3 for fancies; $5 is still obtained for a few Prosperity. Sweet peas are falling off and the outdoor stock is eagerly expected. There are some pretty nice flowers though; 50 cents per 100 will buy nice pink, 75 cents to $1, lavender and white.

Paeonias are the novelty in the market, red and a few white and pink are the colors. Francois Supiot is bringing in a quantity; he had probably 1,000 blooms on the back of his business wagon on Monday. Prices on paeonies range from $4 to $8. Smilax is more plentiful. There will be enough good strings for Memorial Day. The price is about 10 cents. Eugene Bernheimer is handling it in quantity. He is also receiving short stemmed white carnations, not often seen in the wholesale market now. They have been wanted for funeral work.

Germantown.

The death of David Cliffe has removed from our midst a prominent figure in the horticultural world. Mr. Cliffe was born in England about 60 years ago. He came to this country about 1870, starting a florist business at Danville. He came to this city in the early eighties and had lived here since, making a number of visits to England during that time. He was at first foreman for Miller & Hayes, Mt. Airy, and a year or so later started business for himself at Main and Johnson streets, where he conducted a general business. He had a store and about ten greenhouses. His chrysanthemums and bedding plants were features. Mr. Cliffe was twice married. Three sons and a widow survive him.

Notes.

Leo Niessen has been receiving some fine pæonias; he expects to make a specialty of these flowers for Memorial Day.

Philadelphia leads the country in her florists' supply industry. The two great local houses are splendidly equipped for a record-breaking Memorial Day business.

John Burton has his new Meteor house ready for glazing. It adjoins the six houses on his new place, being much like them in style and construction, a difference is that the 16x24 inch glass is put in the wide way. Sweet peas grown between the houses are looking well.

Edward Reid has returned from a short business trip much gratified by the glad hand and cheery welcome received everywhere. He has heavy advance orders for carnations for Memorial Day.

It is stated with good authority that Fred Ehret, the well-known up town wholesaler, has been interviewing agents of the steamship companies with the object of a holiday trip abroad. Another well-known person in the wholesale world, whose name is withheld for the present, will sail for Hamburg about the middle of June.

The Garrick Theater was crowded, the piece was nearly done, when one lady leaned over to her neighbor—"It is too bad," she said, "we have sent Madame ——— no flowers. She has sung delightfully to help our charity without recompense, and we certainly ought to show our appreciation." The other lady rose instantly—"We have fifteen minutes left," she answered, "I will see what can be done." She went to her flower shop two squares away, the clerks were all busy waiting on customers. "Can I have a bunch of flowers at the Garrick Theater in five minutes, or must I go to another shop?" In an instant everyone was flying about seizing this and that, and in less than four minutes Madame ——— was bowing over a great bouquet of flowers, while the audience clapped enthusiastically.

Thursday, the 15th, was a great day at Essington. There was a great base ball game, the result of which will not interest our readers, and a great planked shad dinner, enjoyed by fifty guests. The trophy was presented to our bowling team, and everyone enjoyed himself.

PILOGYNE SUAVIS.

We notice in your issue of May 8 an article in regard to annual vines and referring to Pilogyne suavis. We have grown this vine for twenty years and regard it the prettiest, cleanest vine for verandas in cultivation. Our experience with the vine requires us to start cuttings of it in the fall and shift to 4-inch pots by this time of year. We set these vines about five feet apart around veranda, after preparing a rich, deep bed in which to set plants. We run strings of common twine up and down six inches apart, and then the same crossways six inches apart, and these vines will, in a short time, when well grown, completely cover a veranda.

The leaves are the prettiest green imaginable, delicate, always healthy and never become injured or of a dirty color like some vines. They can be trained any place, and where trained over arches or approaches to veranda they will hang in festoons beautifully. The flowers are very small and ripen into red berries or seed pods late in the season. They will grow 25 feet high. During the hot weather they need a large amount of water to produce the best results. We never have had so good success with plants of this vine propagated after the first of January as with cuttings made the last of October or early in November before frost.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Last Sunday was the hottest day so far this year and Monday and Tuesday were nearly as hot. It has been a "hot time" for this time of the year and no mistake. One of the results was that the receipts of flowers on Monday and Tuesday were enormous and with the increase in the supply came a decided lessening in the demand, as has been the contrary habit of the market since there was any. And, of course, the quality showed the effects of the unseasonable roasting the plants had been subjected to. On Tuesday there was a great accumulation of all kinds of stock in all the wholesale establishments and sales were exasperatingly slow.

As to prices, select shipping grade roses are held at $4 to $5 while on the poorer grades the rate fades down to the vanishing point. On good carnations $1.50 is the top, with probably a few fancies reaching $2, and then down to 10 cents a bunch of 25 or less. Beauties have been in oversupply, too, and we hear of sales of long stemmed flowers being made at ridiculously low rates. Of course, the great bulk of all the stock is soft and off quality—owing to the heat, and a bargain is not always a bargain when you reach your store with the goods. Some shipped-in Beauties that reached one wholesaler Tuesday morning were wide open in the box.

If present conditions continue there will be an abundant supply for Decoration Day; but the quality will be far from what it should be. If a cold wave should happen along the chances are, that a serious scarcity would result. The weather man tells us we may expect cooler weather, but that there is no cold wave in sight. If we should be favored with really seasonable weather from now on, the chances are good for a satisfactory supply of fairly good quality. It's up to the weather.

Anyway, there will be a satisfactory supply of paeonies as there is a good lot of them in cold storage that will be just right and these will not be affected by the weather.

Various Items.

N. Wietor has returned from a fishing expedition to Fox Lake. He caught pickerel and bass the first day, bass and pickerel the second day, and pickerel and bass the third day, and so on.

L. P. Kelly has opened a store at 521 West Taylor street.

John Mangel is making a fine display at his new store. The decorative possibilities of the location are most fully taken advantage of.

P. J. Hauswirth had a large decoration Tuesday and was a large buyer in the market at a time when large buyers were very welcome.

A joint committee representing the Wholesalers' and Retailers' Associations will appear before the Board of Education this Thursday afternoon and endeavor to secure a reversal of the rule forbidding the use of flowers at the commencement exercises of the public schools. In last Sunday's Record-Herald appeared an interview with Uncle John Thorpe in which that veteran lover of flowers emphatically expressed his disapproval of the act barring flowers from the schools.

The Ernst Wienhoeber Floral Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000. The incorporators are Ernst Wienhoeber, Helena Wienhoeber, and George W. Wienhoeber.

Lilac and similar outdoor flowers are still reaching the market in enormous quantities.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The retail cut flower trade the past week has been in a condition of summer dullness, the glut of stock at the wholesale houses of the previous week continuing, but the amount of really first-class stock is limited and hardly sufficient to meet the demand, while the second grade stuff makes up the glut. The stock is extremely poor and the hot weather of late has affected roses in particular and Brides and Maids are badly mildewed and with bad foliage. Roses are hard to sell. Good long Beauties are bringing now from $2 to $3 per dozen. Some really good stock came from Ammann's the past week. The first quality in smaller roses is from $4 to $5 per 100; second stuff, $1 and $2, much cheaper in 1,000 lots.

Carnations are still with us in great quantities and are sold very cheap. The quality is not so good as it was and is showing the effect of the hot weather. Crocker and Hill are classed among the best keepers; Daybreak varies greatly in quality, still some have good color yet.

Out-door stuff is about over; tulips and Narcissus poeticus are done for; lilac, too, is over; same with out-door valley; so paeonies and Cape Jasmine are about the only salable out-door stock in the market just now. Some of our growers will soon begin throwing out and transplanting and prices are not likely to go up until then.

The plant dealers generally report trade in their line very good. All kinds of plants are selling well, especially moon vines and geraniums; of the former hardly enough of them are in the market for the demand.

Various Items.

Some of the retail florists got together last week to talk over a plan of effecting an organization to be called "The Retail Florists' and Growers' Association," the membership to be limited to legitimate retail florists and growers only. This organization is to be independent of the local florist club, and by the time fall business starts up the fakirs, cheap Johns and crape chasers will have a hard row to hoe in St. Louis. The first meeting will be called by the end of the month.

Missouri's exhibits at the Pan-American Exposition won three hundred and eleven medals. Mr. Chas. C. Bell, treasurer of the Missouri commission to the exposition, says one first prize went to Missouri strawberries and the other to Missouri apples. Agriculture, horticulture, mines and mining, dairy products, education and forestry embraced Missouri's exhibits. Three of the six exhibits were awarded gold medals, five received silver medals and five won bronze medals. Missouri's horticultural exhibit won ten gold, six silver and eighty-four bronze medals. Mr. Bell states that the record made by Missouri apples for their attractive appearance and their commercial qualities was a revelation to even the best-informed persons. Mr. Bell also says that the awards of the Charleston Exposition will be made in about ten days.

The Englemann Botanical Club held its regular semi-monthly meeting on last Monday evening, May 12, in the botanical room of the high school. The work of the club in the beautifying of St. Louis was reviewed and new work planned. Suggestions were made that the children be instructed and encouraged to gather seeds from their plants during the summer. To aid in this work some small pasteboard boxes will be secured and distributed among those who make application for them. Mr. Chandler, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, gave an interesting talk on "Commercial Fruit Culture." Mr. Chandler spoke from practical experience. The seed committee reported that over 65,000 packages of seeds had been distributed among the school children. The tree planting committee have in their hands printed instructions as to tree planting.

Bowling.

The bowlers met at Pabst's new alleys on Sixth street, and will from now on make these their home alleys. Arthur Ellison says he will accept Capt. Lang's challenge, both to roll on their home alleys five games and telegraph the scores to the Florists' Review, and let Mr. Grant decide who is the best bowler. Each can have a space roller with him, also a foul line judge. Now, Captain, let's hear from you and see if we can't arrange this match for the first week in June. We will appoint our friend Shaw to represent St. Louis and will go by what he says. Mr. Lang can do the same and appoint someone in St. Louis to act for him in this match.

The rolling Monday night was as follows:

BUFFALO.

We have been weeding and watering and frogging, and incidentally planting out carnations in the rural districts for the past three weeks, and our news of Buffalo is imaginary or obtained at long range. From all accounts, with the exception of a day or two occasionally, business has been quite good. There is not the usual surplus of flowers which has been often visible at this time of year.

Washington Market is now a busy place. There is really a great quantity of plants sold there during May and June. Mr. Weiss does a thriving business the year round, and John Pickelman keeps it going perennially, and dozens of others. The only trouble with the market is the price of their rents; $50 to $100 a year is all they pay and thousands of people go there expressly to do their purchasing. It is really a better opportunity to come in contact with and show your wares to the public than a shop on our main streets, that pay from one to five thousand a year. Markets were instituted or evolved, I believe, with the idea that they were necessary as a means for the farmer or producer to exchange his produce with the city retailer, but things have entirely changed. It is nothing now but a great retail conglomeration, and don't think for a moment that it's the poor or wage-earning class only that will be found doing their shopping in these markets; not by any means; it's the thrifty and penurious of all classes. Mrs. Electric Light always likes to buy her poultry of Mrs. Rachel Pullett, and so she gets her plants and flowers there, too, and Mrs. Natural Gas knows there are no vegetables so fresh as those of Catherine Auldkrout, and so gets her geraniums and hanging baskets of John, whose stall is next door.

It would, in my opinion, be better for the whole community if this retail business was confined to storekeepers, who could then better pay their rents and help to build up many different parts of the city. As for doing any chicken or banana buying there myself, I would rather spend a week assisting Mr. Carmody to put up his ventilating apparatus in the new wing which I understand has just been added to Hades and for which he has the contract. As it is mostly to accommodate Indiana people, it is just that his meat saw should go there.

The weather deserves a passing word. After the 20th of April we scarcely ever get a frost till about Decoration Day, and then only occasionally and very slight. On the morning of the 9th and 10th we had four degrees of frost and two degrees for the next two mornings. Peaches, cherries, pears and early apples were in full bloom, but how much harm is done we don't know yet. I do know, however, that 1,500 White Cloud carnations planted on Thursday afternoon the 8th, looked at noon next Saturday more like little bunches of straw than growing plants, and some had a kink in their vertebra that will plainly indicate where they should be stopped. We have every hope they will come out all right and this is no reason why we should not have planted, even by the first of May, for then they would have been better prepared and we may never get again such a frost in twenty years.

Once more there has been perpetrated in our park department and city an outrage. No milder word will fill the bill. Ever since the lamented McMillan was asked for his resignation the position of superintendent of North Park and our smaller parks, except South Park, where Prof. John F. Cowell presides over the Botanic Garden, has been filled by an amiable gentleman who knew nothing about park management in any form or sense, but he had under him an able, all-round park man, James Braik, and on him devolved the care of our parks, but for charity's sake the figurehead did very well. To remove him to give the position to an able park man, or to the man who has really done the work without the honor or emolument, would be not only right but justice to the taxpayers and would be in any but a politically ridden, machine bossed community.

All who know the ability and worth of Mr. Braik hoped fervently that if a change was to be made by the new board that our beautiful parks would be freed from cliques and favoritism but, no, alas, one incompetent is dismissed and a worse one put in his place. The new assistant has been auditor of the board for some twelve years, a position made for him, and which any $50 a month bookkeeper could fill better than it has been. He is as devoid of any knowledge of park work, either construction or maintenance, as a collie dog is of his grandfather. This is all disgusting and discouraging and I can scarcely keep cool over it.

There are many political and official positions, from keeper of the morgue to his honor the mayor inclusive, that do not require nor call for technical or professional knowledge. They want men simply of good character, good executive business men with a backbone, but would you appoint a hotelkeeper to be district attorney or a pawnbroker to be city engineer? Then why, sir, should this great and beautiful city be disgraced by handing over the care of the parks to a nobody? Politics, favoritism and brotherly love. Hang the partisan politics in our municipal affairs. A Republican will vote for a yellow dog if he belongs to the party and a Democrat will vote for a Democrat if his character is as dark as the cloud that rests over the crater of Mt. Pelee and an eruption would do some good here. W. S.

BOSTON.

The Market.

May 11 to 17 included a changeable week. For the most part of it the volcanic eruptions of the West Indies seemed to have blown about 1,500 feet off the top of the traffic as well as from Mont Pelee, and devastated all New England as far as business was concerned, much as both animal and vegetable life was afflicted in Martinique.

Monday seemed fairly good because the cool weather of the preceding week had affected the quantity of material very much, and all that came in went out very gracefully. Saturday was a very fair day, too, for some reason or other, and was not distinguished by any scarcity of bloom, except that a few more good red roses could have been moved, and violets, while scarce, probably filled all demands. Double tulips seem to be trying to maintain something of a bulb goods season yet. Prices gradually grow smaller on everything as nearly as I can judge, unless it be violets and lilies.

The trend of traffic now at the auction sales is rather more in the line of bedding material than in hardy plants, but the rush upon the former is not on yet.

Paul Richwagen.

Like the frog in the pan of milk Paul keeps kicking and striking out bravely. The frog at last made a wad of butter, quality hereby not vouched for, from which he jumped to safety. Paul's lucky twenty-acre Highlandville purchase acts likely to be his lump of butter and its quality is O. K. He has been churning away very assiduously all winter, and admits success. He still brings in a daily cut of about 5,000 good pinks, which he locates very deftly. Being a general favorite among both buyers and sellers all hands are much pleased to see him sailing along so smoothly. He plans costly improvements upon his houses this summer because they "Needham."

Items.

H. M. Robinson, the compactly constructed greengoods man of Court Square, has been supplying a fine brand of new Alabama fern now for some few days, and it takes a big order for anything in his line to make him blush. He is just now off on a still hunt for 3,000 spruce trees for the Harvard affair next month. P. L. Carbone superintends this decoration as usual.

H. N. Eaton is marketing a huge supply of material from his 80,000 feet. An item in connection therewith is an enormous lot of bedding "stuff," as we grossly call everything; 50,000 geraniums and the same number of coleus help to swell the chorus.

The loss of a half inch piece of a needle does not always cause concern out to Salesman Manter's house, but it did a few days since. His four-year-old girl dropped it down her throat. All danger is safely passed, however.

Sim, of Cliftondale, has a fine growth of his mammoth candytuft just coming on, which will work up into Memorial bouquets very nicely. It is surely a distinct variety and he is going to make something from it later on in its history.

J. S. MANTER.

BUSINESS METHODS FOR BUSY FLORISTS.

IV.

We now come to the most important branch of the florist business, the one that needs looking after most carefully and that should be conducted in the most systematic manner, viz., the expense items. Scrutinize your expense account daily, weekly, monthly, and all the time. Study its details carefully and plan to reduce it to the minimum without impairing the efficiency of your service. Right here let me say it is "penny wise and pound foolish" to employ "cheap" help. The more intelligent help you secure the larger your output will be. And if you employ intelligent, experienced help you will have to pay them more than you will an ordinary "cheap" laborer. But I will discuss this more fully in some future paper.

The two big items of expense with a grower are labor and fuel. Without the first you cannot grow anything all the year round and without the second your labor would be in vain seven or eight months in the year. Keep an accurate record of your pay-roll weekly, monthly, and yearly. If it is larger this year than it was last there should be a good reason for its being so. If you do not know that reason you should find it out. If it is larger in proportion to your sales than it was a year ago, there is something wrong which you should endeavor to remedy at once.

Now in regard to fuel, if you are a practical florist you will soon determine which is the most economical for you to burn. If you live in the east it is safe to say coal is the cheaper, but if you live west of Chicago wood may be cheaper. So much depends upon location, proximity to saw mills, coal mines, etc., that each individual must be the judge for his place. The probability of crude oil being used very largely for fuel in the near future is worth serious consideration by those building new places or putting in new heating plants. But whatever your system of heating may be or whatever fuel you may use keep an accurate record of weights, cost, etc., by the week, month, and year. This gives you a basis for future work and future estimates when purchasing the season's supply. If you are located in a small town you may be at the mercy of some fuel dealer. Oftentimes when thus located you can save money by purchasing by the car load from the mines or docks.

Right here I want to say another word about cheap labor. If your place is 20,000 square feet or more you should have one competent fireman at least. A proper knowledge of firing may save you hundreds of dollars in fuel. If you are fortunate enough to secure a man familiar with steamfitting he will be worth several dollars a week more than if he had no knowledge of it, and if he still further is a natural mechanic and can do odd jobs of carpenter work you have a very valuable assistant who is worth twice as much as the stoker who can only shovel coal and keep the flues clean. Intelligence rightly applied in any line of business will always command better wages than mere brute strength or machine work.

In addition to labor and fuel, repairs to building and heating apparatus always figure prominently in the expense account. If your houses are of modern steel frame, iron gutter, butted glass construction, your repair account will be correspondingly less. In the average range of houses the lumber bill for repairs is annually a very large and important item. Broken glass has to be replaced, entailing another item of no small proportions. Keep an accurate record of each of these items by the month and year.

Pots are another item of expense that always has to be considered. If you do a shipping business box lumber is another important item; with this same item may be included moss, excelsior, straw paper, nails, etc., used for packing purposes. If you have never kept a record of these individual items you will be surprised at the aggregate sum of them during the year, and this very surprise will lead you to devise cheaper methods, cheaper materials, etc., for this branch. Figures are dry things at all times, but they are the most convincing arguments of the success or failure of a business that can be produced.

In addition to the items before enumerated there are the following to be recorded: oil, gas or electricity for lighting, water, taxes, insurance, tools, insecticides and fertilizers, depreciation of buildings, advertising, etc., which vary according to the nature and extent of the business, location, etc. Most of them are what may be termed fixed charges, which are necessary in conducting the business and which do not vary much from year to year. But whatever name or heading they go under they have to be paid and constitute the expense account of the business. A systematic record of these expenses will enable you at all times to analyze your business and know where your money goes.

In this article I have dealt more particularly with the grower. At some future time I hope to offer some suggestions in this line to the store men which may prove of interest to them. I shall also endeavor to suggest some style of books and bookkeeping to set you right and keep you right in the matter.

Plant Registration.

J. M. Horsburgh, Elizabeth, N. J., registers zonal geranium Harriet Cleary, Bruant type, color cerise pink. Trusses large and round on good stems. Foliage light green with a very faint zone. Vigorous and free-flowering.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Boston, Mass., register climbing rose, The Farquhar, R. Wichuraiana Crimson Rambler. Raised by Jackson Dawson. Flower bright rose, slightly fragrant, in clusters similar to Crimson Rambler but individual blooms larger and more double. Foliage dark green and glossy, larger than that of Wichuraiana, persistent and almost evergreen.

C. S. Fitzsimmons, Lansing, Mich., registers rose Queen Madge. Sport from Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, in 1896. Color, true Papa Gontier in the bud, becoming lighter and brighter until the petals fall, without discoloring. Form of bud similar to Kaiserin. Foliage also like that of parent, but of heavier substance. Fragrance with an added spice and foliage has a perceptible sweet briar odor. Stems stiff and of good length. A good, free, all-season forcing rose, grown in Bridesmaid temperature.

Trade Exhibition.

By vote of the Executive Board American growers of any forcing bulbs, plants or seeds hitherto supplied mainly from foreign sources or dealers controlling stocks of such goods, are invited to send samples of their product to the trade exhibition at Asheville, N. C., Aug. 19-22, 1902, where they will be given space free of charge, provided that they then become the property of the society for testing purposes as to their forcing qualities, results of said testing to be published the following season. Please make entries with the secretary.

IVY-LEAVED PELARGONIUMS.

Much might be said concerning these plants, for in addition to those which are well known, and grown extensively for market, there are several beautiful varieties well worthy of cultivation, and of these, Leopard is one of the finest. It has semi-double flowers of an unusual mixture of crimson and mauve tints, with a crimson blotch on the upper petals, with irregular spotting. The blotch on tho upper petals suggests affinity to the show pelargoniums. The plant is of compact habit of growth, and free-flowering. Mrs. W. H. Martin is another pretty variety: flowers pale mauve, habit of growth good, and it flowers freely. Baden Powell, a recent addition to the section, has large semi-double flowers of a soft blush color, with a tint of mauve, and a distinct blotch on the upper petals. Varieties having flowers of a deeper tint are Mrs. J. G. Day, bright scarlet; Mrs. Hawley, large flowers, cerise, makes a fine pot-plant; Ryecroft Surprise, and Achievement, fine pink varieties, but more suitable for pot-culture than for planting out.

Cuttings put in during September and later will make plants for flowering in the spring; but heat is required to root them. After they have started to grow, they should be kept close to the glass, and afforded plenty of fresh air, essential at all times, and more particularly during the winter. Established plants may be kept cool and dry until the days lengthen, when a little warmth may be afforded them. The shoots may be stopped if the plants are not well branched. In potting, make use of good loam, with sufficient sand to keep it open, and pot moderately firmly. It is an error in practice to let pot-plants get very dry when making growth, and too much water is equally damaging.

The greatest drawback in the cultivation of Ivy-leaved Pelargoniums is their liability to attacks of green-fly and other insects, which, however, may be overcome by fumigation or dipping in an insecticide. If the plants are thoroughly cleansed before the flowering period, there will be little trouble with them afterwards; but should green-fly appear, it must be destroyed before the leaves curl. The varieties that are inclined to run up tall may be kept lower by pinching out the points; and more flower will be produced on the dwarf, compact plants than on those allowed to grow up tall, or which are trained without stopping.—A. Hemsley in Gardeners' Chronicle.

SEEDS are all sold, thanks to your valuable paper.—ERNEST WELTMER, Nevada, Mo.

CINCINNATI.

One of the hardest rains, amounting almost to a cloud-burst, visited our city this week, and although rain was greatly needed, yet it would have been much better had it taken a little more time in coming down. As it was a great deal of the water ran off, before it had time to soak in, but, nevertheless, a vast amount of good was done. The weather during the past week was hot and stock suffered a great deal, but cooler weather is now in sight, and it will be appreciated.

There was very little doing in the cut flower line, and business lacked snap. It had very much of a mid-summer look. Yet, although there was a great lot of stock coming in, and most of it second grade, there was, comparatively speaking, very little thrown in the dump. Nearly everything was sold out at some price.

The best class of stock brought a very fair price, and was well cleared up. Brides and Maids especially of the first quality being scarcely enough to fill all orders. But the seconds and thirds were stickers, and were sold to the highest bidder. Sweet peas are still in short supply, and the quality is not of the best either, still the price is held up to last week's quotations.

In carnations, conditions are the same as last week, an oversupply and poor prices. It seems that the carnations that should have bloomed during the winter are all coming now. Of course a glut is always expected about this time, but this year it is rather drawn out, and at present there are no signs of a let-up. Decoration Day is close at hand though, so I do not doubt that they will quit in time to make them scarce for that day. Roses are scarce one day and the next there are many times too many, but as a rule they are closed out at good prices. Great quantities of Liberty are coming in. Prices ruled the same as last week, with best grade being held a trifle stiffer.

Pæonies are now on the market, and bring 3 to 5 cents and sell well. They are to be had in white and dark pink. From the present outlook it would seem as if this flower is going to be scarce for Decoration Day, as they are blooming very fast, and the crop will be in full in a few days. At its best the crop will be short, as nearly all growers report that there will be but one-half to one-fifth as many as usual, owing to the excessive dryness of the past spring.

The prices quoted in this market for Decoration Day are as follows: Roses, Liberty, Bride, Bridesmaid, Meteor, Golden Gate, $4 to $6; seconds, $2 to $3. Carnations, fancy, $2.50 to $3; ordinary grades, $1 to $2. Sweet peas, 50 cents to $1. Pæonies, $3 to $6.

LONDON, ONT.

The London Horticultural Society held a spring flower show in the City Hall on May 7 and 8, it was purely amateur. Over three hundred vases of tulips and two hundred vases of hyacinths and other spring flowers were neatly arranged on tables running the length of the hall. The show which was free to the public and no prizes for exhibitors, lasted two days and was visited by large numbers. The daily press was very liberal in its notices, dealing with it on civic improvement educational lines.

The civic improvement wave has struck the city, and our Mayor "Beck," who by the way is of international reputation as a horseman and is now out for political honors as a candidate for the local legislature, is one of the most interested advocates, having placed at the disposal of the Horticultural Society $100.00 for the prizes for the best kept lawns in the city.

The demand for cut flowers still keeps up with the supply and prices have remained firm. There has been a large amount of funeral work of late and white flowers have been at a premium.

Planting out has hardly begun, we having had a hard frost for several nights in succession.

Gammage & Sons are preparing for a new range of houses. They will build on the same plan as last season using the King Arch, and trussed roof with cement walls and tile beds. LOND.

AMONG the floral tributes to the late Amos J. Cummings was a standing anchor from the Society of American Florists. Mr. Cummings was always intensely interested in horticulture. His æsthetic sense was finely developed and he loved the flowers and loved to associate with the cultivators of flowers. When the society applied for a national charter Mr. Cummings took the matter up with his usual zeal and was of the greatest assistance to the society in obtaining the charter. It was one of the last official acts performed by President McKinley, the signing of that charter. The florists of the United States feel deeply indebted to Mr. Cummings for his untiring efforts in their behalf. They felt akin with him because he always had a word of welcome for them, always showed his appreciation of their labors, and always felt that their calling was one of the most refining influences.

I LIKE THE REVIEW very much. All live, up-to-date florists should take it. JOHN I. HEIBECK; Oxford, Pa.

WRITING LETTERS.

The article in the last issue of the REVIEW on "Business Methods" reminds me of my experience in buying some roses. Turning to the classified advs. I selected four or five to write to. From one I got a prompt reply, gave him my order and actually received the plants before a reply was received from any of the others. I got replies all right from them all, but it was more than three weeks before the last one answered.

I am sure that if the average florist was more prompt in answering his correspondence his advertising would pay him 25 per cent better. I have noticed that it is the little fellow that is slow in answering. The big firms are prompt and clear, and you can always tell from their letters what they have got and how much they want for it. Perhaps the reason the little fellow doesn't get big is because he doesn't know how to take care of his correspondence. JOS. H. PRIOR.

[The big firms were all small once, but they never would have become big in the shipping trade had they neglected their correspondence. And it can be set down as a certainty that those who do not give proper and prompt attention to their correspondence will never gain an important position. No detail of a shipping business is more important than a prompt and full reply to every inquiry.—ED.]

FUNGUS ON GRAPE LEAVES.

The grape leaves sent us by J. J. C. are affected by a mildew fungus. The specimens were forwarded to the pathologist of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Prof. Albert F. Woods, Washington, D. C., who reports that owing to the absence of spores it was impossible to identify the fungus more closely.

He suggests that sulphur be frequently used, sprinkling uniformly over the leaves on both the upper and lower surfaces. Bordeaux mixture would also be effective, but should not be used when the fruit is approaching the ripening period, since it is liable to stain the fruit and render it less salable.

FERTILITY OF SOILS.

Upon the greater number of ordinary soils the proportion of both carbon and nitrogen becomes less and less as we penetrate below the surface, consequently these substances must have had their origin in vegetation which had once grown upon the surface. Some soils, which are called alluvial, possess a subsoil fertility, which appears to have been a deposit derived from the remains of vegetation washed from other soils. Fertility is, therefore, due to the organic residue of previous generations of plants, mixed with certain mineral substances, the most important of which are phosphoric acid and potash.

As the annual rainfall in most parts of the world is in considerable excess of the evaporation, it is evident that those substances which constitute the stock of fertility in a soil must exist in a comparatively insoluble form, or they would have been washed away.

In regard to potash and phosphate of lime, we may assume that they are dissolved by secretions from the plant when the roots are in direct contact with them. Humus may be taken up in a similar manner, and by some plants more readily than by others. Still, it is not until the nitrogen of the humus has assumed the form of nitric acid that its full effect upon vegetation is realized.

It is now known that nitrification is due to the action of a minute organism which abounds in our soils. Under favorable conditions of temperature and moisture, nitric acid is produced with great rapidity. It is also known that the nitrifying organism cannot carry on its work unless it is furnished with alkaline substances to neutralize the nitric acid formed. If, as may be the case, it requires alkalis and phosphates, we can explain why it is that the water passing through peaty soils does not contain nitric acid.

Under whatever conditions the nitric acid may have been produced, there is no doubt, however, that its efficiency as an agent of vegetable growth is very great. Everyone must have noticed how difficult it is to keep land free from weeds; even our roads and gravel walks, if left undisturbed, soon become covered with vegetation. We learn from this that vegetation prevents the escape of nitric acid, and stores it up as food products; then, finally, when vegetation decays, it assumes the form of insoluble compounds, such as humus.

Independently, therefore, of the removal of food products from the soil, which is the main object of cultivation, the constant stirring of the soil brings into activity more of the inactive ingredients, while the cultivation of annual plants—by leaving the soil so long without vegetation—is followed by large losses by drainage.—J. J. Willis, in Gardeners' Magazine.

MENDEL'S LAW OF HYBRIDZATION.

In the Royal Horticultural Society's Journal a translation is given of an invaluable paper published by Abbe Gregoe Mendel in 1865, which, being before its time, has only recently been adequately recognized and brought to general notice, owing to research on similar lines by Professor Hugo de Vries and others. The paper gives in detail the results of a series of hybridizing experiments with peas extending over eight years, and covering numerous generations. Many thousands of plants were raised under conditions which permitted precise records to be made of the effects of hybridization upon the progeny, and from these records a law is deduced and practically established that throughout all the crossings the original parental characters remain intact, whether latent or patent, and make their appearance in certain definite ratios, according to what Mendel terms their "dominant" (assertive) or "recessive" (less assertive) nature.

We must refer to the paper itself for details, as it is a long one, and yet replete with most convincing data, but, broadly stated, the principle set forth is as follows: Hitherto the hybridist has been working almost entirely in the dark, and the idea has been prevalent that when two plants showing differential characters are crossed, the reproductive cells—i.e., the pollen cells and the ovarian cells—united in such a way that there was a general mixture of potencies, which thenceforth led to quite heterogeneous types. Experiments on a comparatively small scale rather tended to confirm this idea, but, carried out on a large scale through numerous generations, it transpires that the reproductive gemmules always retain their integrity, however often transmitted, and that in the process of reproduction it is a matter of association only, and not actual admixture, no transitional forms arising which would imply the latter. Hence, in every generation the original parental characters reappear intact; thus, in a seed-pod of a hybrid pea we may find peas of both parental forms, i.e., wrinkled and round, or green or other color, but both these types of seed will have within it latent the characters of the other, which may reappear sooner or later in the ratio indicated by its dominant or recessive character.

This ratio comes out through all experiments as three to one with extraordinary precision, and, persisting as it does generation after generation, tends to the establishment in far greater numbers of the dominant type, while, on the other hand, the recessive type, though ever diminishing in ratio, can hardly entirely disappear, which explains the phenomenon of occasional reversion even to antiquated forms. Whether the Mendellian law is generally applicable throughout organic life remains to be seen, but the fact that a definite law is demonstrated to exist in one genus forms a great incentive to research, and also directs attention to the channel it should pursue, the whole series of Mendel experiments, and his mode of conducting them, forming, as Mr. Bateson aptly points out, an admirable model for his successors.—Gardeners' Magazine.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

The demand during the last month has dropped somewhat, and owing to increased supplies, prices have also taken a drop. Carnations are very plentiful and of a high grade. The soil here being of a cold yellowish loam, and up till now we have had no warm weather, carnations and roses show little signs of deterioration.

The sales of bedding stock, baskets and window boxes bid fair to be away ahead of former years. The Van Bochove Bros. have filled some very large orders to public institutions and private parties. They are planning to build a new forcing house, and a cold house this season.

The Dunkley Floral Co. are also doing a big trade in bedding stock.

Mr. Saml. Batson is rejoicing over the home coming of a fine ten pound boy.

The celery men are busy planting. Last season being a very successful one, has encouraged them to considerably increase the acreage of the famous product.

Carnation planting in the field is finished. We were fortunate to have some nice rains after planting, which have given the plants a fine start.

There is every appearance of stock being plentiful for Memorial Day.

MASTICA.

What advantages have Mastica over putty?

Does the wood have to be painted before it is applied?

How much will it take to glaze a house of 1,000 sq. ft. of glass, the glass to be lapped?

Will the extra expense in using Mastica pay one in the long run?

W. P. RANSON.

Junction City, Kans.

[Will readers who have had experience with Mastica please favor Mr. Ranson.—Ed.]

MT. EPHRAIM, N. J.—Geo. W. Roper reports the best season for several years. Cut flowers have been in good steady demand, and if the call for bedding plants holds up as at present the supply will be exhausted before the season is half over.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Springtime has taken its departure and real summer weather came upon us before we were prepared for it. Stock is beginning to show the effects of the heat and roses now look like two cents. Carnations continue to come in abundantly and of excellent quality. Outdoor flowers have been of little commercial value so far this season and there will be nothing of any account for Decoration Day trade unless rain comes soon. Business keeps up satisfactorily and enormous quantities of stock is being sold at moderate prices. Most of the retailers are still buying heavily from Chicago and are well pleased both with the quality and prices. The first pæonias of the season seen in this market came from Chicago and retailed at $1 per dozen.

At this season the plant men are working their entire force of help at the summer bedding, and there will be nothing in plants left unsold two weeks from now. R. S. Brown & Son, who do the leading business in this line, report an increase of twenty-five per cent. in sales over last year, and were obliged to buy thousands of plants in order to supply their immense trade. Kansas City is growing and expanding rapidly and this spring saw the opening of several new streets and the erection of some handsome private residences, which explains the unusually large demand for bedding plants.

The Humfeld Floral Company will dissolve partnership in June, and Ed Humfeld has purchased a lot at sixth and Grove streets where he will soon put up 12,000 feet of glass and a store room. The location is a desirable one and he should do well there. William Humfeld will continue the business at the old stand, which was established seven years ago.

Albert Barbe, who never fails to "catch on" when a good bargain is offered him, has recently bought the vacant property adjoining his place, which gives him sufficient ground for 10,000 feet more glass, a dwelling house and a salesroom. Mr. Barbe is traveling the prosperous route and he will be able to realize handsomely on his investment at some future time.

Carl Staech, one of Mr. Newell's faithful employes, has tendered his resignation and will leave town shortly to engage in another occupation among the Choctaws in the Indian Territory.

We have had two visitors the past week, C. L. Knohe, a representative of the Serton Mfg. Co., and A. L. Vaughan, hustler for E. H. Hunt. H. J. M.

Galveston, Tex.—Mrs. Chas. Eickholt, accompanied by her youngest son, started for Europe, May 14. She went by water to New York and sailed from there on May 22 for Hamburg. The trip is made for the benefit of her health, which has been quite poor of late. She hopes to return well and strong in the early fall. During her absence her foreman, Mr. Herman Schwarz, will be in charge of the business and Mr. Eickholt will attend to the correspondence.

Germantown, Pa.—Thos. Meehan & Sons will establish an office at Dreshertown, Pa., in connection with their nurseries there, which will be in charge of Thos. B. Meehan, and after July 1st all wholesale business will be transacted at Dreshertown.
